Since these are very directed documents, the microfiche editions make special provision for reviewing for acquisition.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fished product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquiescer les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample Microlog Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in Microlog as in any library catalogue – by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec Microlog

“Comment une personne d’un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans Microlog est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L’index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group.
This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a

Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55
déposé en mai 1987

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back.
Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

1983 southeastern Skeena regional moose abundance and composition survey

by B. Van Drimmelen. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Fish and Wildlife Branch, 1985. ii, 47 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Wildlife working report ; WR-12) ISSN 0831-4330 MICROLOG 92-03392 1 fiche

In early 1979, a proposed moose management plan was outlined for B.C. which would include a 25 percent increase in moose populations. This report presents the results of a four-day study conducted in early 1983 to test the feasibility of stratified sampling for estimating moose populations on winter ranges, with strata based on habitat capability. It also estimates the size, density, and structure of the moose population within the survey area, reviews population trends of moose in the study area and infers causes of population changes. ### 1987 cinola project baseline studies

In June 1988, City Resources (Canada) Ltd submitted a Stage II report outlining the proposed development of an open pit gold mine (Cinola Gold Project) on Graham Island, Queen Charlotte Islands, B.C. The mine would be located within the Yakoun River drainage, which has significant fishery resources. As part of a Cinola Gold Project pre-development data collection program, a monitoring program was begun in September 1987 which focused on further establishing baseline conditions of sediment quality from which to assess any potential changes in sediment quality resulting from mining activity. In addition, two sediment sampling techniques were used to evaluate differences in collection methodology. Surface water samples were also collected to characterize the study streams. This report describes the area and presents the results of the sediment and surface water quality studies. • BC CA NR PS SC

Annual report for 1988 providing catch and effort statistics for the Atlantic salmon sport catch in the Maritime provinces. The data comes from catch and effort information for rivers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and was collected by Fisheries and Oceans and the New Brunswick Department of Natural Resources and Energy field personnel. The data on Nova Scotia's waterways was compiled from reports supplied by Nova Scotia salmon anglers. Detailed data is presented by province, river, river system, county, and salmon fishing area. A detailed map showing salmon rivers and boundaries is also included, as well as methods of calculation. Most data is given for 1965 to the present. AP CA CF FI SC ST

Since 1962, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has biannually published status reports on even-year pink and sockeye salmon. This report is a continuation of a series which centres on salmon stocks originating from the Johnstone-Georgia Strait study area and on those Fraser River sockeye returning via the inside migration route. The report provides a general overview of the weekly commercial fisheries activities during the 1988 fishing season and includes comprehensive documentation of the management strategies used in the Johnstone Strait study area commercial fisheries. Management decision rationale, interpretation and results relating to sockeye and pink catches are also presented, including escapements of study area pink and sockeye salmon. • BC CA CF FI SC

This census is conducted every five years, with data collected from all commercial growers by mail questionnaire. Data are grouped by standard and size-controlling rootstocks. Cultivars (varieties) are presented in alphabetical order within the groupings of early and late maturity. The province is divided into the districts of St. Lawrence Valley, Eastern Ontario, Georgian Bay, Central Ontario, Niagara, and South-Western Ontario. A summary of data on the apple industry is first given, including estimated area, production and farm value, distribution by marketing channel, number of farms and number of apple trees by rootstock, and number and percent of trees on size-controlling rootstock. Data on standard rootstocks and size-controlling rootstocks are given by cultivar, district, and age group. Data covers 1971-90.

In 1990, 16 herring seiners were chartered for the roe herring test fishing program to provide pre- and post-fishery herring stock information for fishery managers, industry, and research scientists. The program assessed stock abundance, recruitment, and state of sexual maturity of the herring and used this information to determine the location, timing, and estimated duration of the 1990 commercial roe herring fishery openings. A tagging program was also conducted, with tag recovery data providing information on inshore distribution and migration patterns as well as supplemental information for stock identification. Laboratory samples were retained after each sample set as part of the data base for the computer modelling system used to estimate the escapement and predict the available surplus for the 1990/91 Pacific herring fishery. The report also includes field data, including hydroacoustic stock estimates and onboard field analysis data.

In a recent health survey sponsored by the Health Information Section of the City of Toronto, 60% of all respondents identified environmental air pollution as a major area of concern. To assess the total atmospheric concentration levels of volatile organic compounds (VOCs) to which people are exposed, a current air toxic VOC data base characterizing the major microenvironments in which individuals work and/or live must be established. A Personal Exposure Pilot (PEP) study was designed to supply preliminary input to this VOC data base to acquire and analyze indoor air samples from the office and home environments, ambient samples from the downtown and residential areas of Toronto, and samples as different staff members commuted to and from work and as they spent their lunch times outdoors in the downtown area of Toronto. Following an 8-day cycle from June to August, 65 field samples were collected and analyzed. Each sample was scanned for over 135 VOCs, with the number eventually reduced to the 22 most common compounds. This report provides the results of that initial sampling.

1991 Beaufort Sea EM/Radar ice and snow sounding project

Bibliogr. (Canadian technical report of hydrography and ocean sciences ; no. 139) ISSN 0711-6774. MICROLOG 92-05560 1 fiche

Severe ice conditions over the Grand Banks pose a threat to safe operation of hydrocarbon exploration, marine shipping, and fishing activities. Similarly, severe ice thickness and ridge conditions over the Beaufort Sea shelf pose a threat to safe hydrocarbon exploration. A practical technique for measuring sea ice thickness uses electromagnetic (EM) induction and impulse radar sounding from a body towed by a helicopter. The ice and snow measurement system was a prototype of an operational ice thickness sensor whose design goals included the currently available EM, laser profilometer and radar technology into a package that can be operated by non-expert personnel, installed/dismounted quickly and easily on a variety of helicopters, provide ice thicknesses in real time, and make reliable estimates of ice conductivity, thereby distinguishing between first-year and multi-year ice. This report summarizes the data collected during the Beaufort Sea survey and the future work planned for the EM/Radar system.

This speech presents the government's major budgetary objectives as presented by the Minister of Finance. In attempting to deal with the 3 main concerns Quebecers have expressed (reining in the deficit without raising taxes, sluggish economic and employment growth, and the long-term economic future), the Minister's speech covers the plan designed to stabilize the tax burden, employment outlook and support policies, a more prosperous Quebec in the future, and the financial framework for 1991-92, 1992-93 and medium-term prospects. Concluding the speech are five appendices presenting the fiscal and budgetary measures, medium-term outlook for the Quebec government's financial position, the government's financial position and borrowings in the public sector, and a review of the level and nature of the federal government's spending plans for the coming fiscal year.

Part I gives Parliament an overview and situates the Estimates in the context of the overall expenditure framework. It covers the policy sector resource envelopes which include the level of resources allocated for all elements of departmental activity and defines the resources earmarked for maintaining, developing and implementing policies and programs.
Focuses also on person-years and presents an overall person-year summary. Presents totals for transfer payments, payments to Crown corporations and operating and capital expenditures. Also addresses items which represent investments requiring parliamentary approval.

by B. Cain. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1991. vii, 22 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 1093) MICROLOG 92-02623 1 fiche

This report documents a two-dimensional, finite element study of the evaporation of a liquid on a flat surface into a laminar air stream for a hemispherical drop on a flat plate, a hemispherical drop between parallel plates, and a smear on a flat plate. The problems are made dimensionless and the flux from the liquid is determined in a parametric analysis with a range of values of the resulting independent variables. A comparison is made with some experimental data and an example of the use of the results is given.

3D particle tracking algorithm to model radionuclide transport

In the safety assessment of a nuclear waste repository site, it is necessary to determine the time it takes for the radio-nuclides to travel from the repository to outside the host rock mass. Whiteshell Laboratories (WL) of the Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (AECL) investigated this problem and found some aberrations which are not indigenous to the movement of the particles, but originated from the numerical algorithm. This report outlines the problems arising from the existing finite element algorithm used by WL; gives the rationale behind the modifications to resolve these problems; and presents the results of the modifications and a comparison of the results with those from the existing code. Appendices include the FORTRAN source code and the user's manual for the programs.

MICROLOG 92-00943 2 fiche

In the Spring of 1990, the Canadian Teachers' Federation undertook a project entitled 'Young and Female: The Realities, Concerns, Expectations and Barriers Experienced by Adolescent Women in Canada'. Phase I of the project involved a brief review of literature specific to adolescent women's issues, contact with youth-serving organizations to explore possible topics and methods of inquiry, design of a method for holding discussion groups with adolescent women across Canada in order to begin to document their perspectives and interests, coordination of the discussion groups, and reporting of the results. This report provides an account of the activities of Phase I of the project and presents preliminary findings from the discussion groups with adolescent women.

Abris d'arbres pour l'établissement de plantations de feuillus

Fredericton : Ministère des ressources naturelles et de l'énergie, Direction de la gestion des matières ligneuses, 1990. 6 p. (Technique ; 90.08) (Document de travail interne ; 90.08) L'éd anglaise (Tree shelters for...) sur la même fiche. ISSN 0821-8285 MICROLOG 92-03855 1 fiche

L'établissement de plantations de feuillus dans les régions déboisées s'avère très difficile. Cependant, l'expérimentation avec des abris d'arbres dans d'autres régions a démontré la possibilité de réduire le broutage et d'aider les jeunes plants à s'élever rapidement au-dessus de la végétation concurrente. En 1986, la Direction de l'aménagement du bois (DAB) a construit plusieurs abris d'arbres pour les expérimenter avec des chênes rouges plantés près du chemin Kent, dans le comté d'Albert, au Nouveau-Brunswick. Ce document de travail interne se penche sur la question. AP FO PR SC

Abundance, age, size, sex and coded wire tag recoveries for chinook salmon escapements of Campbell and Quinsam rivers, 1989-90

by R.C. Bocking. Vancouver, B.C. : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Fisheries Branch, 1991. x, 109 p. Bibliogr. (Canadian manuscript report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 2124) ISSN 0706-6473 MICROLOG 92-01001 2 fiche

The chinook salmon of the Campbell/Quinsam river system was selected as one of the indicator stocks for assessing the response of Pacific chinook salmon stocks to a new harvest management regime. This report is the fourth in a series describing the escapement monitoring and biological sampling of chinook salmon in this system. The 1989-90 escapements of chinook salmon were calculated using the adjusted Petersen methods by tagging carcasses to produce separate estimates for sexes and rivers and summing these to form a total estimate for the in-river escapement of chinook. The total recovery of chinook salmon at the Quinsam Hatchery was then added to the in-river estimates to produce a final escapement figure for the entire system. This report discusses potential biases in the Petersen method, and the carcass tagging and live tagging approaches, and method of stratification. Assumptions for the methods used and the tests for biases caused by violations of assumptions are also described. Results are given for population estimates, tests of bias in tagging and recovery, population composition (age, length, sex) and the results of coded wire tagging studies. Results are then discussed in relation to other studies. BC CA CF FI LS SC

Abundance, age, size, sex and coded wire tag recoveries for chinook salmon escapements of Kitsumkalum River, 1989-90

by B.L. Nass and R.C. Bocking. Vancouver, B.C. : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Fisheries Branch, 1992. ix, 62 p. Bibliogr. (Canadian manuscript report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 2147) ISSN 0706-6473 MICROLOG 92-06069 1 fiche

The key stream program began in response to objectives set out in the Canada-U.S. Salmon Treaty and in 1984, the Kitsumkalum River was selected as one of the stream systems for assessing the response of chinook salmon stocks to a new harvest management regime whose goal is to rebuild chinook stock to historical levels. This report is the third in a series describing the escapement monitoring and biological sampling of chinook salmon in the Kitsumkalum River. The 1989-90 escapements were calculated using the adjusted Petersen method by tagging live chinook and recovering carcasses to produce separate estimates for sexes and sections of the river. The report also discusses potential biases in the Petersen methods, the live tagging approach, and the method of stratification. Population estimates, tests for bias in tagging and recovery, population composition (age, length, sex), and the results of coded wire tagging studies are included. • BC CA CF FI SC

Abundance, distribution and conservation of birds in the vicinity of Boundary Bay, British Columbia

Abundance, distribution and dynamics of the American oyster population of the public fishing area of Caraquet Bay, New Brunswick

by T.W. Sephton and C.F. Bryan. Moncton, N.B. : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Gulf Region, Science Branch, 1988. vi, 18 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr. (Canadian technical report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 1654) ISSN 0706-6457 MICROLOG 92-07148 1 fiche

The American oyster is a common inhabitant of the shallow bays and estuaries along the east coast of North America, with the most northern commercially exploited population located in Caraquet Bay, New Brunswick. This report is an assessment of the distribution, abundance, and structure of the oyster population of the public fishing area based on a quantitative study conducted in June 1987. A standard sampling procedure, based on previous studies conducted in 1974 and 1979, permits an examination of the changes occurring in the population since it was last surveyed. This study was designed to obtain the baseline field data required to initiate further studies on the biology and ecology of the Caraquet Bay oyster population. • AP CA CF FI SC

The current demerit point system in use in Ontario allocates points to offenses on the basis of the perceived seriousness of the offence. This study used a driver's record of convictions and accidents to predict which drivers, based on their past record, are most likely to have an accident in the near future. A sample of 827,955 records of Ontario drivers containing information about age, gender, convictions, accidents, demerit points and suspensions from 1981-84 was examined. Sixteen new models to estimate a driver's accident potential were formulated and information on all convictions, not just moving convictions, was used. The performance of the new models were described by number of accidents from 1983-84, based on the driver's record of convictions and accidents in 1981-82, and in terms of 'hits' and 'false alarms', with hits being those with an accident potential more than four times the population average, and false alarms being those with an accident potential below the average.

MICROLOG 92-06779 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This report summarizes some of the key issues and concerns of the Association and its membership about the role and function of DHCs specifically and special purpose bodies generally. It provides definitions of financial and political accountability and discusses how special purpose bodies are barriers to direct accountability. It argues that there is a need to achieve an understanding with the province that municipalities are governmental partners and not like other administrative agencies in the planning and provision of social services. It ties these positions to the many changes and developments which have recently occurred or which have been proposed for the roles and responsibilities of DHCs.

Acoustic emission testing of compressed gas tube trailers

MICROLOG 92-00965 1 fiche

Acoustic emission testing was studied to improve the safety, reliability and inspection efficiency of compressed gas tubes and cylinders. Testing consisted of laboratory tests on cylinders into which well defined flaws were introduced and tested under well controlled laboratory conditions and full scale tests on tube trailers. The laboratory tests compared acoustic emission testing with the permanent expansion measurements for sensitivity to plastic instability and evaluated the acoustic emission behaviour of cylinders. Full scale tests of tubes mounted on trailers were undertaken to determine test procedures to detect and locate sources of discrete acoustic emission events. Flaws generated for the tests were machined cuts, embrittled weld beads and fatigue cracks developed through pressure cycling. A cylinder was also tested without any known flaw.

Contaminated-sediments research in inland waters depends upon reliable data on the thickness and geometry of the polluted sediments and the physical processes that lead to their transport and accumulation. Acoustic techniques provide a rapid, non-destructive method of examining contaminated sediments. This paper describes an improved sounder based on a parametric array source. Tests of the array were conducted in Hamilton Harbour, Lake Ontario, to compare its performance with that of a conventional sounder.

Ice is used in the Arctic to construct islands which serve as offshore platforms, but as a shifting, floating mass, the same ice is a hazard which can destroy such platforms. In both cases, it is necessary to be able to establish crack formations. A sound intensity energy-flow mapping application called Dynamic Acoustic Intensity Scanning (DAIS) was developed to measure the energy flow in materials as radiated by ambient vibration. The method involves automated data collection, measurement of sound intensity with real time digital filters, and vectorial analysis. This paper characterizes the emissions as a set of intensities, and collects the emissions over a spectrum of frequency bands in real time, thus permitting an examination and identification of the frequency signature of each emission.

Under the Municipal-Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) program, the pulp and paper sector was required to conduct laboratory toxicity tests to monitor its wastewater discharges for acute lethality to rainbow trout and to Daphnia magna. This report is a compilation of the toxicity data for samples collected in the second six months of the program, and for audit samples tested at the Ministry's laboratory. Monitoring occurred at 41 sampling locations at 27 mills from July to December 1990. This report provides a summary of the results, with more detailed information given by mill.

Adaptation and application of a model for predicting wet sulphur deposition in New Brunswick

submitted to New Brunswick Power; prepared by Claude S. Davis, V. Wong, A. Ciccone. Toronto : Concord Environmental, 1991. iv, 145 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-04937 2 fiche

The review of the 1986 Environmental Impact Statement for the proposed fuel conversion of the Coleson Cove Thermal Generating Station to burn coal resulted in the stipulation that state-of-the-art wet deposition monitoring and modelling programs be established. The modelling system proposed was the LERTAD (Lagrangian Estimates of Regional Transport and Acid Deposition) system, which was developed for the Canadian Electrical Association. The LERTAD system employs MESOPUFF II, a long range transport model deemed to be the best available model after an extensive review of available Lagrangian models. A study was conducted to determine the relative contribution of the Coleson Cove TGS to wet sulphur deposition levels in the Coleson Cove-Saint John area, and to provide a model that can be applied throughout the province of New Brunswick to determine impacts of changes in sulphur emissions on wet and dry deposition levels through the province. This report describes the results of the model adaptation and the application of the model to meet the objectives.

L'Adaptation du semoir au semis direct

par R. Traut. Toronto : Ministère de l'agriculture et de l'alimentation, 1992. 2 p. (Fiche technique) ISSN 0836-1053
MICROLOG 92-06570 1 fiche

Dans différentes pratiques culturales de conservation et des méthodes d'ensemencement possibles, c'est le semis direct qui laisse la plus grande quantité de résidus à la surface du sol ou près de celle-ci. Ces résidus permettent de réduire l'érosion hydrique et éolienne sur de grandes superficies malgré les variations du relief des champs. La grande quantité de résidus laissés sur le sol au printemps oblige à modifier la plupart des semoirs traditionnels. Les modifications qui s'imposent varient selon chaque situation. On trouvera dans cette fiche technique quelques suggestions pour aider les agriculteurs soucieux de l'environnement à adapter leurs semoirs au semis direct.

Adaptive compensation for imbalance and offset losses in direct conversion transceivers

MICROLOG 92-05824 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

The current interest in linear modulation and multilevel signals resulted in an emphasis on DSP implementations to achieve precision signal manipulation. Most transceivers, and direct conversion designs in particular, rely on analog implementations of the quadrature modulator and demodulator, sacrificing much of the precision gained through DSP. This paper focuses on the principal impairments of analog quadrature modulators and demodulators, gain imbalance, phase imbalance, and DC offset. The paper contains an analysis and quantitative assessment of the losses, primarily a degraded BER and out-of-band power in the transmitted signal, due to imbalances and offsets; an adaptive compensation technique for the quadrature modulator at the transmitter; and a compensation technique for the quadrature demodulator at the receiver.

Adaptive filtering for clutter suppression in high frequency radar

High frequency (HF) radar has the unique potential for over-the horizon detection of ocean surface targets. However, ocean waves are also strong reflections for HF radar and this high clutter level has limited its application for target detection. New results from the time domain analysis of ocean clutter show that it can be modelled as two angle modulated signals; this may be used to selectively suppress the clutter component, and enhance the target detection performance. The practical implementation of clutter suppression, based upon this model, involves tracking of multiple time-varying sinusoids. This paper discusses an adaptive filtering technique to track time-varying sinusoids and presents initial results.

An Adaptive filtering technique for pilot aided transmission systems

MICROLOG 92-05704 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Many recent papers have revisited the use of pilot tone as a phase and amplitude reference for demodulation on fading channels. The receiver in a pilot-aided transmission system extracts the reference with a narrowband pilot filter. Its bandwidth has an optimum value which represents a tradeoff between the amount of distortion and the amount of additive noise present in the Doppler-spread tone. Obviously, the optimum bandwidth varies with vehicle speed. This paper addresses the issue of adjusting the filter bandwidth as speed changes. A novel adaptation technique was used here, whereby the receiver selects the optimum members from a pre-calculated bank of stored filters. The algorithm is found to be very robust, in the sense that self-noise and decision direction have little effect on its operation and the resulting bit error rate.

Project to develop a convenient, affordable retrofit device for toilets that would conserve water while retaining the option of a conventional flushing action. The work began with a study of the literature, patents, and existing devices, and then undertook the development of a prototype with the assistance of an industrial designer. After successful laboratory tests, samples of the product, called Adjust-a-Flush, were installed in four homes for a two-month trial. Participants were interviewed. Federal and provincial governments were contacted to determine the requirements for obtaining the necessary approvals to market the device and two marketing studies were conducted. This report describes the development of the device and the marketing plan developed.

Under conditions of asymmetric information, commitment to long-term contracts may permit markets to approach first best allocations. However, commitment is fragile and may be undermined by opportunistic behaviour, notably renegotiation. This paper examines the role of commitment in automobile insurance markets, showing that fully separating strategies, when renegotiation proofed, offers the same ex ante welfare as a replication of single period equilibria. This report includes an assessment of sand and gravel resources as well as a discussion on the potential of bedrock-derived aggregate in St. Vincent Township in Grey County. Methods used involve the interpretation of published geological data such as bedrock and surficial geology maps and reports as well as field examination of potential resource areas. Field methods include the examination of natural and man-made exposures of granular material, mainly at quarries and sand and gravel pits located from records. Observations made at pit sites include estimates of the total face height and the proportion of gravel and sand-sized fragments in the deposit. Observations are also made of the shape and lithology of the particles. Deposits with potential for further extractive development or those where existing data are scarce are studied in greater detail. Representative layers in these deposits are sampled and analyzed for grain size distribution and in some cases absorption, Los Angeles abrasion, and magnesium sulphate soundness tests and petrographic analyses are carried out. Aerial photographs at various scales are used to determine the continuity of deposits, especially in areas where information is limited.

Agricultural runoff contamination in the Fraser River estuary : discussion paper by M.E. Hagen. New Westminster, B.C. : Fraser River Estuary Management Program, Waste Management Activity Program Working Group, 1990. vi, 40 p. Bibliogr.

MICROLOG 92-06725 1 fiche

Lands surrounding the Fraser River estuary are among the most agriculturally productive in Canada but runoff from agricultural practices can be a source of pollutants. Little is known about the nature and magnitude of agricultural pollution since few programs have monitored agricultural discharges. This discussion paper discusses the volume of agricultural runoff, contaminants in general, waste legislation, and a number of waste sources including chemical fertilizer applications, animal manure disposal, pesticide applications, wood waste use, composting, silage and milk parlour discharges, animal mortalities, soil erosion, and irrigation salinity. The nature and magnitude of the waste management problem is defined for each of these agricultural waste sources, along with legislation, programs, and current and recommended best management practices. Action needs, which may include research, public awareness, or development and implementation of control measures, are then summarized.

Annual compilation of data covering financial details and population; food industry; selected census data; international trade; field crops; fruit, vegetables, and specialty crops; livestock and poultry; and dairy. Data is derived from telephone, mail-in and enumerative surveys of farmers for agricultural production; the 5-year census of agriculture, particularly those areas dealing with livestock inventory and crop area estimates, and administrative data, consisting of complete or nearly complete counts of imports, exports, and marketings of inspected or controlled commodities. Most data compares the current and previous years, but some historical information is given. Data is given for the province and Canada, and international trade data includes the United States, Mexico, the European Economic Community, and Japan.

This report is one in a series prepared for the Ontario Round Table on Environment and Economy, established in 1988 by the Government of Ontario to create a sustainable development strategy for the province. Sectoral task forces were set up to deal with agriculture and food, energy and minerals, forestry, manufacturing, transportation, urban development and commerce, and a native people's circle. Each of the task forces was to relate the principles of anticipation and prevention of environmental problems, the use of full cost accounting, informed decision-making which reflects environmental impacts and long-term goals, living off the interest and reserving natural capital, quality over quantity, and respect for nature and the rights of future generations to its subject. This document provides an overview of agriculture and agricultural practices in Ontario, the challenges presented to the industry, methods of conducting sustainable farming and using land, sustainable principles applied to information, marketing, processing and packaging, and rural development, and the possible effects of climate change on the agricultural sector.

Infiltration of soil gas into basements is a cause of indoor air quality problems but very little research has been conducted on such concerns specifically related to preserved wood foundations. This report documents the findings of a field study that examined the air leakage characteristics of preserved wood foundations and the level of off-gassing from the chemicals used in wood preservation. The field work involved four types of testing on 14 houses. A test protocol was developed to determine the air leakage characteristics of the basement portion of the house and was then modified to ascertain the leakage of specific cracks in the basement. The basement wall cavity air was sampled and analyzed for volatile organic compounds and chemicals encountered were compared to those used in the wood preserving process. Samples of wall cavity air, basement air, and air from below sleeper floors were taken and analyzed for radon levels.

Report of a study to identify, describe and evaluate technologies and techniques with which an aircraft cabin fire training simulator could be devised. This report describes the process undertaken in specification formulation, research methodology, data sources access, conceptual exercises, and results generation. Information was gathered through interviews and/or visits to Transport Canada headquarters, the Federal Aviation Administration Technical Centre, the Civil Aviation Authority, the National Institute of Science and Technology, manufacturers of simulators, selected major aircraft carriers in Canada, the U.S., and Europe, and those who had direct experience in such fires. Types of fires studied included those in the galley area, overhead bins, lavatories, cargo containers, passenger seating, and electrical fires.

The walls, in particular, and building envelopes, in general, of less than 20-year-old medium and high rise residential buildings in Alberta have shown a marked reduction in performance, leading to increased heating and cooling costs and high maintenance and repair costs. This study describes the extent and mode of failure in the wall component portion of such buildings and develops recommendations and strategies which, when applied to the design, construction, and maintenance of envelopes of the subject building categories, will significantly reduce the incidence of envelope failure and will result in a minimum cost, maximum benefit relationship in instances where envelope repair is required. The study includes the investigation and analysis of envelope failures in 46 medium-rise (4-6 stories) and high-rise (7 stories or more) residential buildings in 6 communities. Data was collected through personal investigations, telephone surveys, previous investigations, and interviews.

A novel continuous-culture apparatus was designed to maintain indefinite competition between two algal species via a constant inflow of both species from monospecific cultures into a competition vessel. The apparatus was used to test the hypothesis that phytoplankton communities in eutrophic waters are dominated by nuisance blue-green algae because of the effect of decreasing surficial sediment redox as the summer progresses on water chemistry in the water column. The study simulated oligotrophic (high CO<sub>2</sub>, low Fe) and eutrophic conditions (low CO<sub>2</sub>, high Fe) in laboratory microcosms in attempts to manipulate the outcome of competition experiments between a cyanophyte, Anabaena variabilis and a chlorophyte, Scenedesmus sp. Ce document présente une revue et une synthèse de la littérature qui traite des algorithmes parallèles asynchrones en recherche opérationnelle. La plupart des recherches faites sont consacrées aux algorithmes itératifs de la forme  $x_{i+1}=f(x_i)$ . On analyse d'abord des implantations parallèles synchrones où on compare les algorithmes de types Jacobi et Gauss-Seidel. Ensuite, on définit les algorithmes parallèles asynchrones et on présente leurs avantages potentiels. Ces algorithmes sont divisés en trois classes: totalement, partiellement, et faiblement asynchrones. On présente, pour chaque classe, une synthèse des principaux résultats de convergence et on les illustre par des méthodes connues en recherche opérationnelle. La terminaison des algorithmes asynchrones est aussi abordée. De plus, on identifie plusieurs avenues de recherche. PR PS QU SC

Project to implement, test and choose image processing techniques to enhance and segment the ice features present in marine radar images. This enhancement facilitates the visual correlation between the marine radar image and its corresponding SAR image. The segmentation is used to find and define the regions or ice floes in the marine radar image. Various image enhancement and segmentation techniques were implemented and tested, including linear and non-linear spatial filtering, frequency domain filtering, histogram treatment, thresholding, and mathematical morphology. The segmentation process was subdivided into edge-based techniques, which included convolution with local operators, relaxation labelling on edges and curves, and contour tracing, and region-based techniques, which included clustering, relaxation labelling on clusters, quadtree, and region splitting and region merging. Bien qu'il soit reconnu que l'assurance de la qualité constitue un élément essentiel de tout procédé de production, les enquêtes menées jusqu'à maintenant n'ont jamais proposé d'appliquer ce principe aux institutions elles-mêmes. Ce document aborde l'importance de l'assurance-qualité institutionnelle, en donnant quelques exemples de ce qu'un tel principe suppose, et propose des moyens pour y arriver. Il aborde les délimitations institutionnelles, le rôle du programme d'assurance-qualité, et les mesures proposées.

Le Canada est à une croisée de chemins dans le domaine de la gestion de ses forêts. Ayant longtemps souffert de grandes lacunes au niveau du reboisement et de la mise en oeuvre de pratiques sylvicoles appropriées, les forêts du pays ne suffisent plus à satisfaire à la demande croissante de leurs utilisateurs. Les pages de ce document tentent succinctement de faire état des changements et des faits nouveaux qui se produisent en ce qui concerne la gestion des forêts et l'aménagement forestier par le gouvernement canadien.

A preliminary feasibility study was prepared to evaluate the production of ammonium sulphate from a waste ammonia stream produced by Algoma Steel. The study evaluated the production of 6,100 tonnes per year of ammonium sulphate from a 5 wt percent ammonia solution (31,500 tonnes per year) and the production of 12,200 tonnes per year of ammonium sulphate from a 10 wt. percent ammonia solution (31,500 tonnes per year). Preliminary process designs were completed for the plant configurations based on information provided by Algoma Byproducts Corp., information received from equipment vendors, and in-house data. Capital and operating cost estimates were developed from the process design information.

In the past, straw and chaff have simply been low quality crop residues. Recently, it has been shown that ammoniating cereal straws can increase the crude protein level 2-3 times the original level and improve digestibility by 10-15 percent, increasing intake by 10-20 percent. This report presents data on the effect of ammoniation of flax, lentil, and wheat straws and wheat chaff at 3.5 percent of dry matter on digestibility, crude protein content, and production when fed to over-wintering beef cows.

Amplifier linearization using a digital predistorter with fast adaptation and low memory requirements

by J.K. Cavers. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1990. 36 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05789 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

In the past, both theory and practice of mobile communications have emphasized constant envelope modulation such as FM or GMSK which allow power amplifiers to be operated in the nonlinear region near saturation for power efficiency, yet they do not generate intermodulation products in nearby channels. However, continuing pressure on the limited spectrum available is forcing the development of more efficient linear modulation methods. This paper presents and analyzes an adaptive predistorter particularly well suited to baseband implementation with DSP hardware. The paper describes the predistorter structure, demonstrates its ability to suppress intermod products using only a small table, and analyzes the effect of PD nonidealities (especially limited table size) on the PA output. The paper also introduces a fast adaptation algorithm, then summarizes the results and their implications.

Dans un premier temps, les données disponibles et la méthode d'analyse sont présentées. Par la suite, l'analyse des données permet de situer la mortalité violente parmi l'ensemble des causes de décès dans les pays industrialisés et dans les pays en développement, de classer les pays selon le niveau de la mortalité générale et de la mortalité par violence; d'étudier les composantes de la mortalité violente, en distinguant les causes non intentionnelles, les causes intentionnelles et les causes pour lesquelles l'intention est indéterminée; et, de faire ressortir l'importance de la surmortalité masculine surtout pour les décès violents.

L'intégration de données sur le climat et la température dans la prise de décisions, à l'échelle de l'exploitation agricole, a pris beaucoup d'importance au sein des méthodes de gestion complexes qui caractérisent l'agriculture actuelle. La notion d'unités thermiques maïs (UTM) est très importante pour le classement et le choix d'hybrides appropriés de même que pour l'évaluation des terres en termes de possibilité d'y produire du maïs d'ensilage ou du maïs-grain. C'est pourquoi le Comité de l'Atlantique sur l'agrométéorologie a exprimé le besoin de recueillir davantage d'informations sur les variations d'UTM dans le temps et l'espace. Cette étude a pour but de répondre à ce besoin. Elle se penche sur les données et les méthodes, ainsi que sur les résultats et analyses.

This paper presents an exact expression for the pairwise error event probability of TCM transmitted over Rayleigh fading channels. It includes PSK and multilevel QAM codes, as well as coherent and partially coherent detection. The paper also studies several coded modulation schemes this way.

Traffic accidents happen in certain locations and for the past 20 years, engineers and researchers have been trying to understand, systematize and correct hazardous road locations. After a comprehensive study of the existing literature, 30 papers were chosen for an in-depth investigation using meta-analysis. A cross-sectional review of the papers established a comprehensive grid of the main points, filled the grid by scrutinizing the information in each paper, and reported section-by-section the different points on a meta-plan. The grid included objectives of the study, terminology and definitions used, population or scale of the study, data and their availability, methods and techniques including criteria used for identifying risk locations, problems and biases, and utilization and range. To analyze definitions and terminology, textual analysis was used. A discussion and illustration of different methodologies and practical issues is presented.

Le problème des disparités régionales est l'un des plus tenaces de l'évolution socio-économique du Canada. Ce document se penche précisément sur cette question et examine l'ampleur des disparités régionales en 1990 et leur évolution depuis la Deuxième Guerre mondiale. Il aborde également quelques questions délicates, les possibilités d'emploi, et les revenus.

Angler effort and catch in five Fraser River chinook salmon sport fisheries, 1989

by N.D. Schubert. Prince Rupert, B.C. : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Fisheries Branch, 1992. xii, 69 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr. (Canadian manuscript report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 2128) ISSN 0706-6473
MICROLOG 92-05030 1 fiche

The escapement of chinook salmon to the Fraser River system improved since the early 1980s to such an extent that the sport fishery was reopened in selected terminal areas. In 1989, sport fisheries were opened in the lower Fraser, Brown, Clearwater, Quesnel, lower Shuswap, South Thompson, Thompson and Vedder-Chilliwack rivers. In most areas, structured assessment studies monitored fishery performance, evaluated stock impacts, and provided data upon which future management decisions could be made. This report describes the study design and field procedures and documents the results of the 1989 sport fishery assessment studies in the lower Fraser, upper Quesnel, lower Shuswap, South Thompson, and Thompson Rivers. The report presents estimates of angler effort, harvest and release by species, and angler attributes in each fishery, and concludes with a discussion of results and recommendations for the management and assessment of future fisheries.

Poor returns of chinook salmon to the Fraser River system led to the closure in 1980 of all chinook adult sport fisheries. Since then, returns have improved to an extent which permitted the reopening of sport fisheries in selected terminal areas. In 1990, sport fisheries were reopened in the Bowron, Clearwater, lower Fraser, Quesnel, lower Shuswap, South Thompson, Thompson, and Vedder-Chilliwack rivers and Mabel Lake. In most areas, structured studies monitored fishery performance, evaluated stock impacts, and provided the data upon which future management decisions could be made. This report describes the study design and field procedures and documents angler effort and harvest and release by species in the lower Fraser, lower Shuswap, South Thompson, Thompson, and Vedder-Chilliwack Rivers for 1990. The report concludes with recommendations for the management and assessment of future fisheries.

Angler harvest of lake char, kokanee and rainbow trout from Bridge Lake, 1990

by M.G. Lirette. Williams Lake, B.C. : Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks, Fisheries Branch, 1991. i, 19 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Fisheries technical circular ; no. 92) ISSN 0229-1150 ISBN 0-7726-1501-2
MICROLOG 92-04304 1 fiche

Two of the key problems in managing lake char are their susceptibility to over-harvesting because of their late maturing at larger sizes than most salmonids, and their low sustainable yields. The fishery in Bridge Lake provides an unusually high yield of small lake char, suggesting that it may be on the verge of over-exploitation. This study was conducted to determine the status of the lake char population by quantifying angler harvest and analyzing age, growth, and diet of the lake char. The study also evaluated the effectiveness of kokanee and rainbow trout stocking programs in the lake. An estimate of total angler use of the lake for the 1990 summer fishery was derived from aerial boat counts on twenty weekend days. Total angler effort was calculated using a relationship between average midday weekend boat count and total angler days. The 1990 boat counts were compared to counts made in 1987, 1988, and 1989. Nature Hills Resort collected angler data on effort and catch success on the same day as aerial boat count days. Lake char killed by anglers were measured for length, scale sampled, and when available stomachs were taken and frozen for diet analysis. During late October 1989 and 1990, spawning lake char were captured by angling and gillnetting and were sampled for sex, length, and disease pathogens. Ages were determined by two independent otolith readings in 1989 and by independent otolith and scale readings in 1990.

This review describes how the anti-sealing campaign adversely affected the livelihoods of sealers in Labrador and Newfoundland and of the Inuit in northern Canada, who hunted only adult seals. It outlines how a similar campaign might affect trapping and fur ranching in this country. It also addresses two other activities (animal research and factory farming) that have been attracting sporadic but well-publicized attention from various animal rights groups and seem likely to be the next targets of animal rights campaigns in this country.

Anionic and non-ionic ethoxylate surfactants content in marine aerosol

To evaluate fully the true causes and effects that the continuous, unchecked spread of surface-active agents such as detergents might have on the water ecosystem, the anionic and non-ionic ethoxylate surfactant content in sea spray was determined using an analytical method developed by the authors of the paper. The anionic surfactant content of rainwater was also measured to ascertain a possible correlation between the surfactant content of the spray, the surfactant content of rainwater, and the acidification of water. The study was carried out in an area overlooking the sea (San Rossore, Pisa), and in an adjacent pine forest. Five sampling stations were set up and a total of 27 sampling days spanned March-December 1983 and January 1984.

As part of the Canadian Nuclear Fuel Waste Management project, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. is characterizing various rock formations to determine their suitability for long term disposal of high level wastes. The program also includes the construction of an underground research laboratory (URL) near Pinawa, Manitoba to provide an opportunity for extensive in situ investigations. Biaxial testing conducted on core obtained during the construction and operating phases of the URL indicated that the rock may be anisotropic in terms of modulus of elasticity. It was felt that further study in the form of acoustic velocity and uniaxial compression testing could provide additional insight into this behaviour. Testing of sample suites from the 240 level indicates that there is some anisotropy, mainly related to the prevailing orientation of microcracks. This report presents results from a similar test program conducted on samples obtained from the 420 level.

Aperçu de l'aide fédérale à l'industrie de la pêche depuis 1945

par R.W. Crowley, B. McEachern et R. Jasperse. Ottawa : Ministère des pêches et des océans, Direction générale de l'analyse économique et commerciale, 1990. 50 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Rapport d'analyse économique et commerciale ; no 71) ISSN 0843-5626 MICROLOG 92-07178 1 fiche

Ce document retrace l'histoire des programmes fédéraux d'aide à l'industrie de la pêche, depuis 1945. On regroupe, dans l'introduction, les renseignements de base sur la nature cyclique de l'industrie et son importance sociale et économique. Suit une chronologie des événements importants dans l'industrie, sur les côtes de l'Atlantique et du Pacifique. Les programmes mis en oeuvre depuis 1945 sont regroupés sous les rubriques suivantes: aide à la commercialisation, aide aux pêcheurs et aide pour les installations. La section III porte sur la période de 1977 à 1983, après l'extension de la compétence canadienne en matière de pêche à 200 milles, en 1977. On y décrit les recommandations du groupe de travail du gouvernement concernant l'aide financière, la restructuration subséquente des entreprises de pêche et l'aide à l'expansion des pêches. Quant à la section IV, elle porte sur la période en cours, depuis 1984. Enfin, l'épilogue décrit la situation des pêches au moment de la rédaction de ce rapport.

Pendant longtemps, l'apiculteur a considéré l'hivernage des abeilles comme un des risques majeurs de son entreprise. En plus de la perte de plusieurs colonies, un certain taux de mortalité et une baisse de la vigueur étaient observés chez la population restante. Il est maintenant possible de remédier à cette situation. Ce document examine la question en se penchant sur la préparation de la colonie, le comportement des abeilles durant l'hiver, la constitution d'une forte colonie; le nourrissage des abeilles; l'hivernage intérieur; les conditions d'hivernage; la construction d'une chambre d'hivernage; et, les modalités d'utilisation.

There is concern that increased soil acidification from acid precipitation may inhibit the growth and establishment of white spruce in Ontario soils. In response to this concern, a mobile rain exclusion canopy system was used from May 1987 to August 1989 to determine the effect of simulated acid rain (SAR) on the growth of white spruce seedlings potted in mineral soil in the presence of ambient air pollutants such as ozone. Tree seedlings were exposed to SAR of pH 3.2, 4.3, and 5.6 for two and one-half growing seasons in three separate treatment areas in Brampton, Ontario. The seedlings were grown in three soils ranging from pH 4.8 to 6.0. This report presents the results of the project.

Cette étude décrit la mise en application du modèle d'analyse d'utilisation de l'eau dans le bassin versant de la rivière L'Assomption. Ce modèle permet de comparer l'offre et la demande en eau de surface sur une période projetée de vingt ans. L'année de base de l'application du modèle est 1986 et l'année finale de prévision est 2006. Cette prévision de la demande et de l'offre en eau est basée sur trois scénarios de croissance (faible, moyen et fort), tant pour la consommation municipale, qu'industrielle. Toutefois, puisque l'objectif principal de cette étude est de déterminer si la quantité d'eau sera suffisante dans l'avenir, seul le scénario fort a été utilisé dans le modèle.

Application of aquatic toxicity tests to selected effluents in Saskatchewan : study results, 1990

Regina : Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety, Water Quality Branch, 1991. viii, 91 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-03059 2 fiche

In 1990, a review was undertaken of the need for implementation of toxicity monitoring of effluents and surface waters in Saskatchewan. A pilot study design was prepared to provide the work plan for obtaining some baseline acute toxicity data on major effluent discharges and to assess the application of selected bioassays to various types of effluent. This report gives the findings of the pilot study and provides recommendations for future applications and assessments of acute toxicity test protocols as a water quality monitoring tool. A total of 37 water and effluent samples were collected and analyzed and six quality control samples from clean rivers were analyzed as presumably non-acutely to surface waters. Sixteen industrial effluent samples from five locations and 15 municipal sewage effluent samples from the three major cities (Saskatoon, Regina, Prince Albert) sewage treatment facilities were collected and analyzed between July 21 and October 13, 1990. Samples were tested using the rainbow trout 96-hour acute lethality test, Daphnia magna 48-hour acute lethality test, microtox, and nematode survival, growth, and maturation test.

Information on more than 750 rock slices is included. Several hundreds of calibration tests on reservoir rock and other samples were run and most of the information was analyzed using dual energy scanning. A computer package was used for the analysis of the X-ray images and the prediction of core properties such as bulk density, porosity, and effective atomic number.

This report looks at techniques to perform the localization of SRSAT 406 MHz distress beacons using geostationary satellites. After reviewing the characteristics of the distress beacon transmitters, the main specifications of the GOES satellites are described, as they can be assumed as typical geostationary satellites for this application. A brief review of the geolocation techniques is presented and an in-depth analysis is conducted on the time difference of arrival technique. The analysis covers the impact of the Earth's flatness, channel impairments and satellite geometry. The delay estimator performance is expressed as a function of signal-to-noise ratio and circular error probability. The overall system performance is directly related to the performance of the delay estimator.

The Clean Air Program (CAP) was initiated by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment in November 1987 and one of its important features is that the dispersion model will play a crucial role in the general regulation of air quality in Ontario. Ontario Hydro plans to install flue gas desulphurisers (FGD) at Lambton Thermal Generating Station (TGS), beginning in 1994, to reduce its sulphur dioxide emissions. The use of FGD, however, will result in a number of factors which reduce plume buoyancy, thereby reducing the effectiveness of FGD in bringing about improvements to the local air quality. This study was conducted in an attempt to clarify concerns and to provide the necessary data for the approval of the Lambton TGS system. The study is also part of the ongoing effort to evaluate the Ontario CAP and determine the implications of applying CAP to Ontario Hydro's operations.

Applications and implementations of static discontinuity grammars

MICROLOG 92-05570 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Static discontinuity grammar (SDG) is a type of logic grammar whose distinctive features are that rules can state dependencies between any two or more subtrees in a derivation tree for a grammatical sentence, and that descriptions are expressed in terms of node domination in the tree. These features make SDGs useful in formulations of constraints utilized in linguistic theories such as Government and Binding. This paper looks at how linguistic and non-linguistic constraints can be captured succinctly in SDGs. Simple examples illustrate linguistic ways of thinking without requiring detailed knowledge of any particular linguistic theory, and will also illustrate some non-linguistic possibilities of SDGs. The paper then looks at different ways of processing the grammars introduced in these examples. In particular, implementations of top-down depth-first, and left corner SDG interpreters will be examined, as well as a compiler that generates code for both analysis and synthesis.

by D. Stechey. Windsor, Ont. : Canadian Aquaculture Systems, 1990. ii, 18 p. : ill. Bibliogr. Developed and implemented with the New Brunswick Dept. of Fisheries and Aquaculture, and the Dept. of the Environment.
MICROLOG 92-03856 1 fiche

This report presents the results of an extensive field study to examine commercial fish production practices, culture facilities design, suspended solids settling behaviour, and critical design parameters of existing effluent treatment operations. The report also identifies those factors which most significantly affect effluent quality and management in commercial culture of Atlantic salmon smolts in the province of New Brunswick. A detailed overview of sedimentation design (including a design example) for intensive smolt culture operations is included.

Cette étude évalue l'envergure et certaines des répercussions économiques majeures du secteur de l'approvisionnement de l'industrie aquicole au Canada. L'étude est basée sur un examen de la documentation et sur une enquête détaillée auprès des fournisseurs aquicoles du Canada. Ainsi, on a communiqué avec 207 entreprises du pays, ce qui représente près de la moitié de tous les fournisseurs canadiens. Quelque 128 d'entre elles ont répondu au questionnaire, soit un taux de réponse de 62 p. 100. Les résultats de l'enquête ont été convertis en tableaux et extrapolés, afin de donner une idée des ventes, des revenus, des emplois, de la rémunération et des avantages sociaux au sein de l'industrie.

Comme en témoignent les vergers des stations de recherches, des universités et des fermes des Prairies, il est possible de produire des fruits de grande qualité moyennant de bonnes pratiques d'arboriculture. Le recours à l'irrigation, aux brise-vent et à diverses techniques culturales permet d'améliorer les conditions de végétation qui règnent dans une région donnée. L'emploi des cultivars les mieux adaptés à la région considérée est le plus sûr garant du succès. Cette publication donne la liste de ces cultivars et se penche sur les facteurs dont dépendent le succès de la plantation fruitière; le choix des cultivars; l'établissement des arbres; la conduite du verger; l'irrigation; et la lutte contre les parasites et les maladies.

Le chapitre préliminaire porte sur le processus conceptuel et permet de comprendre de nombreux facteurs relatifs à l'élaboration et à la rentabilité du projet, souvent négligés. Les quatre chapitres suivants explorent les principaux éléments de l'architecture paysagiste en fonction de l'agencement du terrain, du nivellement, des matériaux inertes et des plantes. L'ouvrage porte ensuite sur d'autres thèmes importants, notamment la construction et l'entretien. Les six chapitres comprennent les solutions courantes aux problèmes qui se présentent souvent pendant l'élaboration du concept et du programme d'entretien, et se termine par une récapitulation.

The Asia Pacific Rim countries have attracted increasing interest among the world's industrialized nations. During the last 20 years, this corner of the globe achieved phenomenal growth in terms of output, real incomes, and exports. This study examines the trends in trade and investment flows between Canada and the Asia Pacific Rim countries and evaluates the competitive position of Canada in these markets vis-a-vis its major competitors. Les 9 et 10 juillet 1991, l'Institut canadien pour la paix et la sécurité internationales a tenu un atelier sur les aspects civils du maintien de la paix. Ce rapport résume les travaux de cet atelier. Il porte essentiellement sur les grands thèmes abordés, et ne cherche pas à suivre l'ordre chronologique dans lequel les discussions se sont déroulées pendant ces deux journées. Les recommandations et les thèmes énumérés dans le document sont ceux qui ont provoqué le plus de discussions parmi le groupe des spécialistes et universitaires de haut niveau présents à l'atelier. Finalement, on a examiné les réponses données à ces questions, et à d'autres, en portant une attention particulière aux trois aspects les plus évidents de l'aide fournie dans le passé par des civils au maintien de la paix, à savoir: l'administration, la police civile et la surveillance des élections, afin de pouvoir établir une liste de recommandations sur la participation future des civils dans d'autres opérations de maintien de la paix.

This report describes a visit to Japan in July, 1990. The aim of the visit was to learn more about aspects of the management of Japanese urban areas and to present the findings in a manner relevant to the interests of decision-makers in the Toronto region and elsewhere in Canada. The main focuses were on waste management, regional planning and transportation, and the training of senior officials. This document provides the main conclusions on these matters. • CA MU PA

Study to project the need for new zinc smelter capacity to 2000, to determine where new capacity would most likely be built, and then to examine the economics of new smelter capacity from both new greenfield smelters and from incremental expansions of existing smelters, particularly in N.B. Forecasts were developed based on a base case macroeconomic outlook and on a pessimistic outlook. Assumptions were made on the net East/West trade in zinc concentrates and zinc metal which were then subtracted from non-Socialist world metal consumption to derive projections of needed non-Socialist world mine and metal production to meet the level of total demand. A mine-smelter balance for the non-Socialist world was then calculated and the regional balances were estimated for the base case scenario. The economics of the smelter were also calculated. • AP CA NR PS SC

A survey of mountain pine beetle infestation in a 370 sq km demonstration area was initiated as part of a damage appraisal program to investigate the operational use of available remote sensing techniques for identification of beetle-killed forest stands, mapping their areal extent, and measurement of tree damage. Survey procedures involved the mapping of infested stands, acquisition of imagery, image analysis, and compilation of volume losses. The acquired imagery consisted of conventional normal colour and colour infrared aerial photography at scales of 1:56,000, 1:19,000, and 1:8,000, plus supplementary colour photography of 32 four ha plots. The size of damaged areas was determined directly from the map for each of some 300 affected cover types. The intensity of infestation and volume losses were compiled from the analysis of photo plots and ground sampling data, and tabulated by map sheets and cover types. This report describes the procedures used and the losses shown. BC CA FO NO SC

CanadianOxy Chemicals Ltd. presently operates a phenol-formaldehyde resin plant in the City of Fort Erie, Ontario, which produces a total of 12 million pounds per year of moulding compounds, industrial resins and laundry resins. The process involves a condensation polymerization reaction of phenol and formaldehyde in two batch processing kettles, producing water as a by-product. This water is distilled, condensed and collected in a distillate receiver, with the water containing about 5-8 percent phenol. The distillate is then hauled offsite for disposal. Costs in 1987 for this disposal were 280,000 dollars, with the value of phenol lost about 120,000 dollars. The company is considering measures to recover phenol from the distillate and to treat all effluents on-site to meet sewer discharge limits. This report presents the results of Phase I of a project to identify viable options for recovering phenol at the plant, selecting the best available technology and evaluating the technical and economic feasibility of the process on a bench-scale. The performance of underground power cables is critically affected by the thermal properties of backfill soil around the cable. The possibility of thermal drying of soil around a power cable complicates the thermal design process. According to the European design model, the cable ampacity is a function of the critical temperature of the backfill soil. At present, this approach is used in the thermal design of cables carrying continuous load, and the critical temperature values are assumed to be unique to a given soil type. This report gives the results of a laboratory study designed and conducted to determine the critical temperature of a uniform sand. EN ON PR SC

This study identifies and ranks the relative importance of environmental issues associated with gold mining based on a review of the scientific literature and the regulatory documents issued to gold mines in the Timmins-Kirkland Lake area of Ontario. The review identified decommissioning of the entire mine property, effects monitoring in receiving water bodies, production of non-toxic effluents, and long-term stability of tailings as significant. The study then suggests a number of technology developments, research programs or laboratory studies which could be initiated by CANMET to address these deficiencies Seventeenth century Ataratiri was a Huron village located near present-day Midland. This document is the blueprint for redeveloping Ataratiri. It provides background to the undertaking and describes the steps taken, and those that remain, to achieve final approval of Ataratiri. It also identifies the broader policy and development context for this process. It recommends five fundamental principles that should underlie all of the remaining policies. It examines different aspects of the development proposal and recommends preferred solutions to a wide range of planning issues. It addresses regulatory controls required to permit Ataratiri to be developed, recommends a particular approval process to ensure the proper and timely application of these controls, and discusses some implementation issues which will have to be addressed after this plan is approved in order for Ataratiri to be built.

Presentation and discussion of the results from the Atlantic Region federal-provincial toxic chemical survey of municipal drinking water. The survey collected water samples from Atlantic municipal raw sources and analyzed them for heavy metals, major ions, pesticides and synthetic organic chemicals. A parallel collection of corresponding (distributed) treated water was made for the quantification of volatile organics. Data were compared to the guidelines for Canadian drinking water quality and the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers guidelines for the protection of aquatic life.

Atlantic Salmon Management Plan, 1992 : guiding principles and major elements

Ottawa : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, 1992. 47 p. CSI 21105 022. MICROLOG 92-05558 1 fiche

The 1992 Atlantic Salmon Management Plan is guided by the principles adopted by the Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans through consultations with the Atlantic Salmon Advisory Board and the provincial governments and incorporates the three regional Atlantic salmon management plans, developed in consultation with regional and area representations from interested associates and organizations. The Province of Quebec administers management plans for the salmon stocks in that province. This document gives the objectives of the 1989-93 management strategy, its principles and major elements, regional management measures for commercial and sport fishing, and enforcement activities. Salmon fishing areas in Northern and Southern Labrador, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island are briefly described and include individual and area quotas, waters involved, and opening and closing dates. ● AP CA CF FI LS SC

This atlas presents ice and oceanographic conditions during a period in the early spring of 1990 in graphic form as part of the Labrador Ice Margin Experiment. The period corresponds to the time of the maximum southward advance and beginning of retreat of the ice east of Newfoundland. The information on ice conditions is based primarily on the daily ice charts issued by the Ice Centre Environment Canada. The oceanographic data were collected from a cruise aboard CSS BAFFIN from 25 March-14 April 1990. Data include temperature/salinity, current, ice drift, and surface wind. ● AP CA CF NR PS SC

The comparative importance of aptitudinal and motivational variables in socio language acquisition for 152 students in grades 6-8. Following the administration of a language aptitude test (EMLAT) and an attitude/motivation test battery (AMTB), predictor variables were compared to the criterion variable - the final French grade. Data was then treated to t-tests, analyses of variance and a Pearson's Product Moment Correlation. Results show aptitudinal/motivation variables as more significantly correlated with second language acquisition than aptitudinal variables. Integratively-motivated students have more favourable attitudes than instrumentally-motivated students. Grade level does not significantly influence second language learning. Early adolescent females have more favourable attitudes and greater achievement scores than early adolescent males. ED ON PR

La féminisation linguistique est à l'ordre du jour. L'actualité de cette question tient au fait que les femmes ont de plus en plus accès à des postes qui, auparavant, étaient réservés aux hommes. Parce que la langue ne reflétait pas suffisamment cet acquis social et professionnel des femmes, on a vu apparaître dans l'usage, au cours des dernières années, des formes féminines nouvelles. cours électroniques situées dans une cinquantaine de communautés du Nord de l'Ontario. Dans chacune des communautés il y a un(e) coordonnateur(trice) qui facilite la prestation des cours dans les sites, renseigne les gens sur les possibilités de formation à distance et aide les utilisateurs(trices) du réseau à manipuler l'équipement. Le Telewriter Il est un poste de travail audiographique qui permet de créer, transmettre et recevoir des graphiques à l'avance ou pendant une présentation. A la base, c'est un ordinateur muni d'une tablette électronique, d'un modem
'voice too', de la carte et du logiciel Telewriter.
Les images voyagent par ligne téléphonique tout comme la voix. Telewriter est employé dans un cours soit comme tableau électronique, soit comme rétroprojecteur. Une fois les pages conçues, un capteur permet de les emmagasiner dans le fichier du cours en question. L'enseignant(e) peut alors les envoyer en direct ou sur disquette, par la poste et les utiliser durant son cours. Cette technologie permet d'ajouter un élément visuel

This paper develops a matrix expansion-based compilation technique that compiles complex linear recursions into highly regular compiled forms. The technique uses a variable connection matrix, the V-matrix, to simulate recursion expansions and discover the expansion regularity of complex linear recursions. The study shows that linear recursions can be compiled into highly regular compiled forms by the V-matrix expansion technique and such compiled forms can be generated automatically.

Aquaculture cages in B.C. are sited in nearshore plankton productive waters which provides habitat for many fish, including such commercially important species as salmon, herring, lingcod, and rockfish. If these wild fish enter cages, they may become prey of farmed salmon. Initial stomach samples showed that farmed salmon ingested wild feed, including herring and plankton. This report presents the results of a study to determine the availability of wild feed to farmed salmon. Fish were sampled with a purse seine, set in the immediate vicinity of the fish farms. Catches were sorted for species and preserved, then weighed and measured for length. Selected juvenile salmon alimentary tracts were examined for contents. Stomachs were rated for fullness and prey items were removed and counted.

L'avortement est un sujet qui préoccupe la société canadienne depuis un certain temps. Parce qu'il met en jeu des convictions profondes et très diverses sur les droits individuels, les responsabilités sociales et le rôle des femmes dans la société, l'avortement peut être source de divisions et de dissensions. Un nouveau projet de loi sur l'avortement (projet de loi C-43) déposé au Parlement à la fin de 1989 constitue un compromis visant à mettre un terme au débat sur l'avortement au palier fédéral. En janvier 1991, ce projet de loi a été déposé au Sénat à la suite d'un partage égal des voix. Ce document se penche spécifiquement sur les développements constitutionnels et juridiques relativement au sujet de l'avortement.

B.C. Forest Service review of U.S. Forest Service's 'pilot' project

Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1991. 13 p. MICROLOG 92-01359 1 fiche

In 1985, as a result of a system which was becoming increasing strangled in regulations and rules, the U.S. Forest Service initiated a pilot project which aimed at reducing the existing bureaucratic red tape. The project was tested at three National Forest sites and one research station. The test sites operated with the freedom to change or eliminate any process so long as it remained legal; operations were conducted under a lump-sum budget without the need to track spending item by item; staffing was discretionary within the budget; employees were empowered; and attitudes were changed so that nothing was imposed from the top and all ideas were tried, even if they failed. A national steering committee was set up whose function was to find some way to agree to proposals. This report describes the operation and achievements of the pilot project and its relevance to the B.C. Ministry of Forests, and presents recommendations and an action plan for B.C.

These data sheets summarize the estimated capital and operating costs that each pulp, paper or paperboard mill would have to incur to comply with the currently proposed Federal regulations on BOD, TSS, and acute toxicity to fish under the Fisheries Act. In all cases, the costs are based on mills as they existed in late 1989, so that a mill which complies with all these regulations because of its inherent process and/or because of prior expenditure is shown as having zero cost or is omitted. Mills which discharge all effluent to a municipal system are considered to be in compliance. The sheets are presented in west to east geographical order. Information is included on effluent equipment, design load, and quantity. Operating costs include electrical power, various chemicals used, wages for employees, sludge disposal, and maintenance.

In 1983, the Beaufort Environmental Monitoring Program (BEMP) was initiated to provide the technical basis for design, operation and evaluation of a comprehensive and defensible environmental research and monitoring program to accompany hydrocarbon development in the Beaufort Sea relating to the environmental and regulatory responsibilities of the federal Indian and Northern Affairs Dept. and the Dept. of the Environment. Because of a number of developments since 1983, a new initiative was considered necessary in 1990 and this was named the Beaufort Region Environmental Assessment and Monitoring Program (BREAM). This report summarizes the first year of BREAM, describing the most current hydrocarbon development and transportation scenario for the Beaufort Sea and the Mackenzie Delta and Valley regions and the results of a planning meeting held in Calgary in March 1991. The report also discusses the focus and priorities for the future, sets out an action plan, discusses information database requirements, and describes recent research of relevance to BREAM.

The increasing use of spray ice in Arctic offshore exploration and construction led to a study that includes a series of triaxial compression tests on saline, laboratory-made spray ice. Factors affecting spray-ice behaviour and its engineering properties are independently selected and assessed, and the results are compared with the existing literature on spray ice and similar materials. The stress-strain behaviour of spray ice is studied for isotropic consolidation pressures ranging from 45-172 kPa applied for 4-19 hours at -10C, with a few tests performed at -5C.

The anodic dissolution of copper anodes having various impurity contents was investigated using potentiodynamic (cyclic-voltammetry) methods. Laboratory conditions were established that resulted in reproducible and predictable electrochemical characteristics for the corrosion of the copper anodes. Element surface-region analyses of the copper anodes and investigations of the surface structure were performed to determine the influence of continuous cycling on the surface morphology. Scanning electron microscopy with an energy dispersive X-ray analysis system was employed to examine the corroded surfaces of the anodes.

The use of bentonite as a pelletizing binder has been a standard practice in the iron ore industry since the beginning of pellet production. In 1988, the Iron Ore Co. of Canada evaluated a number of potential organic binders on laboratory and pilot plant scale to develop an acceptable substitute-organic binder for the pelletizing of Carol concentrate. Peridur was found to be the most promising binder. This report evaluates the improved formula of Peridur 2.30; carries out detailed laboratory and pilot plant testwork to investigate if an acceptable pellet quality can be produced, and establishes operating parameters for balling and induration to be used for the plant scale test on one pelletizing line at the Carol pellet plant.

Discharge control technologies considered included in-plant measures for reduction of pollution at source, and external effluent treatment. Several technology trains, or groups of individual process modifications and/or external treatment processes were developed for each of the four sub-sectors in the pulp and paper industrial sector. The report covers manufacturing processes, effluent characteristics in 1990, demonstrated control technology, emerging technologies, alternative technology trains, and costs of application of technology trains.

The purpose of this paper is to provide an overview of the various social problems of Quebec that are linked, rightly or wrongly, to immigration, and to assess the strategies developed by the two levels of government to address these problems. It sketches out the basic approach to culture followed by the various governments. It discusses the multidimensional nature of society in order to place the concept of culture in a larger theoretical context. It also examines Quebec's situation specifically, including the various social problems that are sometimes linked to the presence of a diversified immigrant population. It examines some of the immigration related issues and challenges currently facing Quebec society. The paper ends with a discussion of issues related to state management of ethnic and ethno-linguistic relations in contemporary Quebec.

Contamination of surface and groundwater by synthetic organic compounds is a major environmental concern in Ontario and most industrialized areas. In sampling natural waters for organic contaminants, two main sources of negative bias are recognized, loss of volatile compounds by partitioning into the atmosphere and loss of hydrophobic compounds by sorption onto synthetic polymers used in the construction wells and samplers. An artificial well was built consisting of 6" diameter stainless steel pipe, 32 ft in height with a sampling port located near the bottom. Gas-laden artificial groundwater approximating that in an aquifer contaminated by low-level organics was prepared and pumped into the well, along with 2 L of a 10% HCl solution. Sampling systems evaluated included a double check-valve stainless steel bailer, a peristaltic pump, a WaTerra inertial pump, an IEA syringe sampler, a Well Wizard ladder pump, and a Solinst double-valve purge/sample pump. In each experiment, the high capacity foot-valve WaTerra (model D-32) and one or two other samplers were tested, and the water was sampled using the control port at the bottom of the well. This report gives the results of the sampling.

Bioassays at the primary producer level can detect subtle changes in the normal functioning of aquatic systems in response to contaminant load. This project developed simple but sensitive bioassays for the effect of the sediment on phosphorus availability to the open water microorganisms (phytoplankton plus bacteria); bacterial growth rates as assessed by DNA synthesis; and phytoplankton growth rates as assessed by the Pmax (light-saturated photosynthesis) to chlorophyll A ratio (assimilation number). Sediment was collected from a site in Toronto Harbour which is known to be heavily contaminated with a range of metals and organic toxins. Lakewater samples for the phytoplankton bioassay were collected about 2 km offshore, from a station southwest of Toronto Islands. Sampling was carried out on June 8 and November 6-7, 1986 and July 28, 1987. Samples were analyzed for chlorophyll, phosphorus, extractable phosphate, total phosphorus, trace metals, and PCBs.

This paper presents the results of studies on the fate of juvenile salmon released into natural conditions after being reared for three years in a fish hatchery and analyzes the causes of the low survival rate of the hatchery fish in the river and in the sea. The release methodology is discussed using data taken from the study and from a review of the literature.

Biomonitoring with moss monitors in the vicinity of the Cameco uranium refinery at Blind River, Ontario

The flat, vertically-oriented mossbag traditionally used by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment is useful for pinpointing sources of emissions and showing temporal changes. To add to the advantages of the flat mossbag and to better simulate deposition to ground vegetation, a device that combines some features of the flat mossbag and the dry deposit gauge was constructed. This mossbag is a horizontally-oriented, unidirectional device that has a solid container to minimize loss of moss and to provide a known surface area. This project tested the performance of the mossplate monitoring device in the vicinity of the Cameco uranium refinery near Blind River, Ontario on the north shore of Lake Huron, where increased levels of uranium have been found in the foliage. Thirty monitoring stations were established. At each station, mossbags were enclosed in polypropylene netting, and mossplates in petri dishes covered by nylon netting were exposed. Each month during the summer and autumn of 1987 the collectors were changed and the exposed moss was analyzed for uranium. This report presents the results of the tests.

Deuterated synthetic lubricants, which greatly enhance thermal and oxidative stability and therefore produce a longer life than their proteated counterparts, were identified as a potential non-nuclear market for heavy water. This project established the capability for the biosynthesis of fully deuterated lipids from the algal culture Scenedesmus obliquus (strain 393); developed methods for the recovery of fatty acid end products; and provided a preliminary evaluation of this production method. Procedures for harvesting microalgae and for extracting fatty acids from algal cells were also examined.

This report was commissioned as a discussion paper for the National Biotechnology Advisory Committee. It reviews and critically evaluates progress in biotechnology as applied to the pulp and paper industry since 1984 to initiate action in Canada to assist industry in implementing those biotechnologies which look most promising. The first section of the report highlights the most recent advances in biotechnology, divided into those already applied on an industrial scale (wastewater treatment, mill-scale bleaching trials with xylanase, and mill-scale trials on dewatering in papermaking), those under development (biological bleaching, biomechanical pulping, enzymatic pitch control), and fundamental research (lignin biodegradation, molecular mechanism of cellulase action). The second section of the report analyses factors which have contributed to the success or failure of biotechnologies since 1984 and compares pure and applied research in those countries considered to be important in the field, such as Canada, Finland, Japan, Sweden and the United States.

Jasper Millworks has been trying to produce rough birch lumber to use in the production of finished specialty items and supply has been a problem. An assessment of the feasibility of logging and sawing birch in Northern Alberta and hauling it to Edmonton for drying and finishing was undertaken and a pilot project was set up in the Whitecourt and Slave Lake forests. The aim was to cut and saw 1,475 fbm of birch located in a commercial stand of spruce. Potential birch stands were located through discussions with Alberta Forest Service personnel, local logging contractors, and small sawmill operators. Once located, birch stands were inventoried and cull plots were established. Total birch volumes for the two areas were estimated using a combination of inventory compilation data, deciduous-enhanced forest cover maps, and local experience. Results obtained include green lumber weight, birch logging costs, and other estimated costs for sawing and hauling.

The 1990 survey represented a continuation of a long-term monitoring study of birds in McKinley Bay and Hutchinson Bay, a nearby area used as a control. The survey was conducted to determine whether diving duck numbers had changed since the initial phase of the study from 1981-85, and to provide additional baseline data on natural annual fluctuations in diving duck numbers. ### Black cottonwood : a nurse species for regenerating western redcedar on brushy sites Regeneration of coniferous crop species on high brush hazard sites in the Vancouver Forest Region is complicated by vigorous regrowth of deciduous trees and shrubs following harvesting. An alternative approach to the use of herbicides to regenerate western redcedar is the use of black cottonwood or red alder as a nurse tree, where the fast-growing black cottonwood shades out the brush shrubs, allowing marginal growth conditions for shade-tolerant conifers such as western redcedar. To test the nurse tree regeneration method, experimental plantations were established in 1986 at four high productivity, high brush hazard sites. Three treatments (interplanted, brushed, and control) were used at each location. While it is too early to draw conclusions, the longer term development of the species using the nurse tree approach was examined in a 10-year operational nurse tree population.

It is known that any given probability distribution of the states of the observable units of a Boltzmann machine can be realized if no limit is imposed on the number of hidden units, but very little is known about the number of hidden units necessary for such realization. This paper considers Boltzmann machines as associative memories and shows that there exist vector sets whose memorization on a Boltzmann machine requires a number of hidden units exponential in the size of the vectors. Additional results give tight bounds on the number of hidden units in terms of the vector set size. The restrictive model of auto-association in Boltzmann machines provides a construction for negation intersection, and composition of the vector sets which are memorized by Boltzmann machines.

In response to increasing public concern about existing and potential problems with Bow River water quality, the Bow River Task Force was formed and began work in May 1990. The Task Force enquired into the specific causes of pollution in the Bow River; recommended specific measures to reduce or eliminate those causes of pollution, or if insufficient information existed for such a course, recommended a course of action to further address issues or concerns; recommended a course of action to protect the river against future pollution; provided preliminary cost estimates and identified the benefits of implementing various recommendations; and identified funding alternatives for implementation. Presentations were received from individuals with expertise in water quality management in the Bow River Basin and various reports, publications, and data were evaluated, along with new data collected by the Task Force. This report presents the findings of the Task Force, including an overview of water quality conditions and management practices within the Basin; identifies sources of pollutants to the river; and gives 33 recommendations to improve and protect river water quality as well as providing preliminary cost estimates and identifying the benefits of implementing these recommendations.

Breeding for resistance to leaf rust in durum wheat : final report

Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1991. 8 p. MICROLOG 92-06717 1 fiche

In 1986 there was a tremendous buildup of leaf and stem rust in the great plains of North America. Although resistant wheat varieties limited the damage on the Canadian Prairies (except for winter wheat), several durum wheats showed only partial resistance to leaf rust. Since almost nothing is known about leaf rust resistance in durum wheat, a project was begun to identify the genes for resistance in a set of nine varieties (Medora, Wakooma, Stewart 63, Pelissier, Golden Ball, Lloyd, Vic, Quilafen (Chile), and PI 192179 (Ethiopia)), seven of which have been grown in Canada and the northern United States, and in potential parents for durum breeding. The main purpose of the research was to provide information and to develop leaf rust resistant parents for use by durum wheat breeders. Initially, nine durum wheat varieties were selected for study, but PI 192179 was dropped because of its weak resistance. All possible crosses were made among the varieties to see if they carried the same genes for resistance. Plants from the second generation of each cross were tested with leaf rust in the greenhouse. Some of the most resistant plants from crosses between two resistant parents were selected to combine genes from both. Their progeny were tested in the field to see if they were more resistant than the parents.

British Columbia natural gas : core market policy

Victoria : Ministry of Energy, Mines and Petroleum Resources, 1988. 13 p.
MICROLOG 92-06104 1 fiche

In October 1985, an agreement was signed among the Governments of Canada, Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan on natural gas markets and prices. The agreement outlined a plan for the gradual deregulation of natural gas markets in Canada while maintaining industrial competitiveness, enhancing market access to Canadian natural gas producers and consumers, fostering competition, maintaining secure supplies for Canada, and maintaining the sanctity of existing contracts. This paper presents a policy outlining which consumers must be protected from future supply disruptions by long-term contracts. It also describes the constraints to open access, provides definitions of core market and non-core market, gives responsibilities and options, describes those exempt from the core market and the modes of transportation to non-core customers, and identifies other Canadian markets. Also included are rules for energy supply contracts as set out by the B.C. Utilities Commission.

Pour chaque programme, on présente les points saillants des plans pour 1992-93 et un sommaire des besoins financiers; les points saillants du rendement récent; et un examen des résultats financiers. On décrit le mandat, l'objectif et l'organisation des programmes et services, et on donne une perspective de planification qui explique les facteurs externes qui influent sur chaque programme, les initiatives et l'efficacité. On analyse chaque activité et programme en présentant les dépenses relatives détaillées. Les renseignements supplémentaires présentés donne un aperçu des besoins financiers par article et détails des besoins en personnel, par groupe professionnel.

Based on the assumption that reading and writing are natural processes that cannot be separated from a child's oral language development. A talklist summarizes the functions of children's language and gives examples of actual speech and the context in which they are used. Activities and teaching strategies are provided for block play, music, and print. For each stage, content includes descriptions of how materials are used, observable behaviours, talklist samples, and the connection to reading. Stages in block play are: rows and towers (beginning reader), walls and bridging (beginning and emergent reader), enclosures and patterns (emergent reader), and representation and reproduction (successful reader). Music stages are: moving to music (beginning reader), integrating language and movement (emergent reader), and consciously integrating and extending language and movement (successful reader). Writing stages include: experimenting with writing (beginning reader), replicating and reproducing writing (emergent reader), and using the conventions of writing (successful reader). Appendices contain lists of songs and other resources.

This report documents the presence of the European invader Bythotrephes cederstroemi (Cercopagidae, Onychopoda) in the plankton of eight lakes in the District of Muskoka in south-central Ontario. Lakes affected include Lake Muskoka, Lake Joseph, Lake Rosseau, Fairy Lake, Mary Lake, Peninsula Lake, Lake Vernon, and Go Home Lake. Because this is the first record of the species from inland lakes in Canada, the biology of B. cederstroemi is briefly reviewed, and potential implications of its invasion of the Canadian Shield are discussed EV LS ON PR SC

Bythotrephes cederstroemi (Schoedler) is a large, predacious, Palaearctic zooplankton that invaded each of the Laurentian Great Lakes during the 1980s. This report presents the results of a study to locate the zooplankton in eight of the 12 largest lakes in the Moon River/Go Home River watershed in the District of Muskoka in central Ontario. Zooplankton were collected monthly from several widely-spaced stations in Lake Joseph, Lake Muskoka, and Lake Rosseau over the ice-free seasons of 1989 and 1990. At each station, triplicate vertical hauls from 0.5 m above the sediments to the lake surface were taken. Zooplankton were collected at several widely-spaced stations in July and August 1990 and/or in June 1991 from the remaining lakes using vertical hauls with a metered, 46 cm diameter, conical tow net constructed of 150 µ mesh. Hauls were taken through 30 m at stations deeper than 30 m, and from 2 m above the bottom at shallower stations. LS ON PR SC

Puslinch Lake is a shallow, wind mixed, eutrophic, hardwater system suffering from excessive phytoplankton blooms with Cyanophycean genera dominating in summer and fall. Zooplankton densities are relatively low with cyclopoid copepods and non-daphnid cladocerans predominating. Fish populations are poorly developed and beach closures are common due to high bacterial counts. This report provides a summary and history of data collected at Puslinch Lake near Cambridge, Ontario, including information on bacterial densities, phosphorus loading, hydrology, sediment chemistry, macrophytes, fish, plankton, and water chemistry. Residents were surveyed on their opinions on water quality, recreational opportunities, and lake rehabilitation EV ON PR PS SC

Light reflected from one surface onto a second surface changes both the intensity and spectral power distribution of light leaving the second surface, while light from the second surface illuminates the first. This mutual reflection effect can be exploited by examining pixels where interreflection is and is not present. This paper uses finite dimensional linear models for the ambient illumination and for surface spectral reflectance. The one-bounce model is tested with data corresponding to an infinite bounce, multi-zone simulation. BC PR PS SC

La Loi relative aux rentes sur l'Etat est entrée en vigueur en 1908 et autorisait la vente de rentes à jouissance différée ou immédiate aux Canadiens, soit à titre individuel, soit en vertu des modalités du régime des pensions de l'employeur, pour amener les Canadiens à faire des économies en vue de leur retraite. La Loi sur l'augmentation du rendement des rentes, adoptée en 1975, mettait fin à la vente de contrats de rentes sur l'Etat. La Direction des rentes continue d'administrer les contrats échus et ceux qui viendront à échéance dans les prochaines années. Ce rapport annuel contient des statistiques sur la charge de travail, des données sur la mortalité des détenteurs de contrats, le bilan financier, la valeur des rentes sur l'Etat, ainsi que le rapport du vérificateur et des états financiers.

La première a consisté à analyser de manière approfondie le profil du commerce du Canada et l'évolution de sa compétitivité dans le temps. La deuxième étape a consisté en une analyse détaillée de la situation passée et actuelle de 25 secteurs représentant environ 37 pour cent des exportations du Canada en 1989. La troisième étape de la recherche, enfin, a étudié le cadre institutionnel et le contexte de la politique publique au Canada, ainsi que leurs répercussions sur la compétitivité des entreprises canadiennes. Cette étude s'est particulièrement penchée sur les questions qui étaient les plus importantes pour la compétitivité du Canada et en présente la synthèse.

Passant d'abord en revue les arguments soulevés par les différents acteurs au cours du débat qui a suivi la parution du Livre blanc en 1987, ce travail montre ensuite, en s'appuyant sur l'équivalent technologique, comment les sous-marins sont passés de l'état de submersibles à celui de véritables sous-marins durant les années de l'après-guerre. Le domaine de l'évolution des ondes sonores dans l'eau et celui des modes de propulsion sous-marine sont plus particulièrement étudiés. Après une brève description des sous-marins nucléaires, les caractéristiques des sous-marins traditionnels diesel-électriques sont abordées. Constatant les progrès et les limitations qu'amène ce type de sous-marins, l'auteur présente les nouvelles techniques (nucléaires ou non nucléaires) de propulsion indépendantes de l'air, qui sont à l'étude et en développement depuis déjà quelques années. This study was initiated in response to an increasing number of complaints about breeding and wintering Canada geese in the Fraser Valley. The study determined the location and type of problems caused by the geese; documented concerns of land owners near the identified locations; documented desired population levels in problem areas; and suggested management practices to control problem flocks. Information on flocks was obtained from different land users in urban and rural areas. In urban areas, telephone polls were taken of 21 municipalities and 4 regional districts in the Fraser Valley, 59 public and private golf courses, 10 cemeteries, six airports, five stables, three race tracks, and eight other land users. For rural areas, 28 farmers to which scare or kill permits were issued in the past three years were phoned and a mailed questionnaire was sent to 55 Delta Farmers' Institute members. CA EV LS SC

Many questions are being asked regarding immigration, including: Should immigration levels rise considerably? What are the demographic implications if they do not? What is needed in the way of settlement services for new immigrants? What should be our policy for refugees? And what kinds of immigrants are best for Canada? While this paper does not answer these questions, it does provide a framework whereby readers may become aware of some of the issues. It also provides background information for what can be a very complex area of law and government policy and administration.

In 1985, the Wetlands Drainage and Improvement for Forestry Program was initiated to develop cost-effective and environmentally sound forest drainage technology appropriate for the boreal forest, to develop optimal silvicultural regimes for increasing the growth of commercial tree species on forested wetlands with lowered water tables, and to assess the effects of drainage on soils, local hydrology, ground vegetation, and tree growth. Goose River, McLennan 28, and Wolf Creek wetland areas were selected as experimental sites and portions of each were drained in 1986 and 1987, with data collected from both drained and undrained portions. Additional data were collected from a freed swamp near Fort McMurray that was subjected to different drainage treatments between 1975 and 1980. Data was collected from the Fort McMurray site to obtain an interim estimate of tree growth rates until sufficient time elapsed to obtain estimates from permanent sample plots on the three experimental areas.

Like many countries, Canada regulates the export of weapons and technologies which could be used for military purposes. Such regulation is broadly referred to as the 'control of strategic exports'. Western countries have, individually and collectively, developed rules of conduct on trade in strategic products. Since the end of the Cold War and the conflict with Iraq, these control policies have become the subject of a general review. This document discusses the history of strategic export controls, principles governing the control of strategic exports, Canadian legislation and controls on strategic exports, principal restrictions on Canadian strategic exports at the present time, and the current debate on the control of strategic exports.

This report updates the September 1988 report, taking into account such factors as the continuing narrow range of world oil prices, the growth of the North American natural gas trade, concern about long-term adequacy and sources of electricity supply in the U.S., and public concerns about protection of the environment. Rather than using high and low scenarios, the Board developed a single scenario of Canadian energy supply and demand based on one set of world oil price and economic growth projections, then subjected it to such sensitivity tests as the impacts of higher and lower world oil prices, Canadian natural gas resources, and North American natural gas resources. Other changes include more detailed analysis of the North American natural gas market and the inclusion of estimates of emissions of gases from the production and use of energy, including those gases linked to the greenhouse effect, acid rain, and low-level ozone.

Times and heights for all daily high and low waters at reference ports are predicted and listed in daily tables. In some reference ports where tidal behaviour is complicated, the tide is also shown in analogue form as calendar plots. Times and heights for secondary ports for both high water and low water are tabulated as time and height differences relative to a reference port. The document also predicts and tabulates times of slack water and of maximum current in daily tables, indicating current directions. Times of slack water and of maximum current for secondary current stations are tabulated as time differences relative to a reference. Maximum speeds for secondary stations are tabulated as either a percentage of the maximum speed at a reference port or as a maximum speed.

Canadian underwater mine apparatus : unmanned performance validation of the second prototype second stage regulator

by D. Eaton. Downsview, Ont. : Defence and Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine, 1989. ii, 11 p. : ill. (DCIEM technical report ; no. 89-TR-44)
MICROLOG 92-06167 1 fiche

The Canadian underwater mine apparatus (CUMA) provides life support for a mine-countermeasures diver to depths of 80 m of seawater (msw). The design of the CUMA produces a breathing gas with constant oxygen partial pressure by mixing pure oxygen with a diluent, either nitrogen for diving to depths of 55 msw or helium for depths of 80 msw. A reliability test of the gas-mixing circuit, two manned evaluations of the CUMA, and a field trial proved that the gas-mixing circuit worked as desired. However, a crucial component in the diluent circuit, the second stage regulator, needed technical improvements to increase its compatibility with saltwater and helium. Changes were made and a test protocol was designed to evaluate the output characteristics, and to some extent the reliability, of the new regulator. This document describes the results of a series of tests performed to establish the linearity of the regulator, the coefficients of the regression line, and the repeatability of the relationship.

This paper examines the distribution of the total time spent unemployed, and how this distribution has changed during the period 1977-87. It focuses on the 'annual unemployment experience' of an individual. It addresses the following questions: What fraction of the labour force is unemployed longer than six months during the year? For what fraction of the total time spent unemployed during the year do these individuals account? How does this distribution vary across demographic and regional characteristics, and over the course of the business cycle? To what extent can the long-term unemployed be identified?

The CANMET ferric chloride leach process : cementation of copper and silver on iron

by D.Y. Shimano and G.F. Wallingford. Ottawa : Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology, Mineral Sciences Laboratories, 1989. ii, 22 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; MSL 89-24(TR))

MICROLOG 92-02044 1 fiche

CANMET is actively investigating and promoting a FeCl<sub>3</sub> leach (FCL) process to recover lead, zinc, copper and silver from a complex pyritic bulk flotation concentrate. New Brunswick has abundant reserves of complex base metal sulphide ores, many of which cannot be economically exploited using conventional processing routes. With little base metal capacity coming on stream in the short-term, it would be advantageous to further develop the CANMET FCL process. This study focuses on the cementitious behaviour of copper and silver on iron at 90C, 25C, and 50C using iron wire and iron powder.

Large deposits of complex fine-grained base metal sulphide ores occur in many locations worldwide but their economic exploitability is severely hindered by the difficulty of achieving high metal recoveries while producing readily saleable selective flotation concentrates. The ferric chloride leach (FCL) process was developed to treat complex, low grade, sulphide bulk concentrates but the acid consumption was high. This study was conducted to reduce the acid consumption while maintaining the high metal recoveries.

Capture of sufficient bindings for irregular linear recursions

by J. Han. ~ Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1990. 13 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05831 1 fiche (Available on file only)

Binding propagation in recursive rules has been popularly studied in deductive database research. Some interesting techniques, such as Magic rule rewriting and its variants, have been developed based on the study of binding propagations in rule/goal graphs. This paper re-examines binding propagations in linear recursions and demonstrates that the rule/goal graph may not be able to capture sufficient bindings for certain kinds of linear recursions (which are called irregular linear recursions), and hence the Magic rule rewriting technique may not be able to derive the minimal set of query-relevant facts for such recursions. Such recursions are characterized by using a variable connection graph and a compilation technique is proposed to overcome this difficulty. BC PR PS SC

Carbohydrate accumulation and turgor maintenance in seedling shoots and roots of two boreal conifers subjected to water stress

by R.S. Koppenaal, T.J. Tschaplinski and S.J.

Colombo. Ottawa : National Research Council Canada, 1991. 6 p. : ill. Bibliogr. In Canadian Journal of Botany : vol. 69, no. 11, 1991 MICROLOG 92-06107 1 fiche

Jack pine and white spruce seedlings are often planted on drought susceptible sites in the boreal forest region of North America where low soil water availability and high evaporative demand can create sustained plant water deficits. The ability of many plants to tolerate water stress is largely dependent on their capacity for osmotic adjustment, a mechanism that facilitates an osmotic gradient favourable for maintaining cell turgor through the accumulation of solutes. This study compared the effects of water stress achieved by soil drying on tissue water relations and the organic solutes that accumulate in the shoots and roots of jack pine and white spruce seedlings. Jack pine and white spruce seed was obtained from general northeastern Ontario collections and were grown in a greenhouse. At 13 (jack pine) and 17 (white spruce) weeks after sowing, seedlings were transplanted and allowed to reacclimate for one week. Seedlings were exposed to either a water-stress treatment, achieved by soil drying over 7 days, or to a nonstress treatment in which pots were watered daily. This report describes the results of the experiment. CA FO LS SC

The western Newfoundland carbonate platform has been the site of lead-zinc exploration for several decades, resulting in the discovery of several dozen occurrences and one commercial producer. Geological information on these occurrences, collected by industry, government, and university geologists, is scattered among government assessment files, company reports, and university theses. This study merged this information on more than 40 of these occurrences with new on-site observations and follow-up laboratory investigations. The occurrences are grouped into three main types, each with a distinct mineralogical and textural characteristic, with host rocks ranging in age from Middle Cambrian to Early Carboniferous. Other oils which are unlikely to be of direct Canadian concern are also included because they have been well characterized and used in relevant studies. The properties listed for each oil are those which will provide an indication of a spilled oil's environmental behaviour and effects. The oils are arranged in alphabetical order and the names used to identify them are those used by the authors of the original data or by suppliers of the samples. For certain properties, data is given at different temperatures and for different degrees of oil weathering.

This catalogue was assembled as an aid to individuals and organizations evaluating, monitoring or reporting on the environmental resources of Atlantic Canada. Through a process of consultation with data holders, profiles of each discrete source were prepared according to a standard format. The 1990 catalogue contains 112 one-page profile sheets, each providing location, type of data, data format and method of retrieval.

Catalogue of successful hazardous waste reduction/recycling projects

[by] Energy Pathways Inc. and Pollution Probe Foundation. Ottawa : Environment Canada, Conservation and Protection, Industrial Programs Branch, 1992. ii, 110 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-04698 2 fiche

This catalogue highlights examples of successful hazardous waste reduction and recycling projects undertaken by individual companies in twelve industrial sectors. It is based on a review of the trade and environmental literature from the past 10 years, with an emphasis on recent publications. The catalogue provides companies with useful information on practical, cost-effective reduction and recycling techniques being used by other industries in Canada, the U.S., and abroad. Cases were chosen on the basis of availability of technical information, whether the technology was proven or at a pilot or research stage, payback period/cost-effectiveness of the approach, and the date and country of implementation. Cases are organized by industrial sector and cover chemicals and allied products, electric and electronic machinery, fabricated metal products, leather and leather products, lumber and wood products, machinery, paper and allied products, petroleum and coal products, primary metals, rubber and plastics, textiles, and transportation equipment.

This is the eighth volume in the series of catalogues detailing the type of invertebrate fossils in the GSC collection in Ottawa. The catalogue mainly includes all fossils described between late 1981 and 1990. Descriptions or illustrations of fossils listed in previous volumes but redescribed during the period are also included. Primary type categories Holotype, Paratype, Syntype, Lectotype, Neotype, and secondary Hypotype, Topotype, and figured specimens are used with the same connotations as in previous volumes. The original reference for each species is cited as well as subsequent reviews directly involving the forms listed.

Les 30 dernières années ont vu apparaître une riche floraison de nouveaux taxons de nématodes, ce qui rend de plus en plus difficile la tâche de se tenir au fait des changements et des rajouts taxonomiques. Cet ouvrage offre une classification regroupée de l'ordre des Tylenchida, qui rend ce matériel nématologique, jusqu'ici trop éparpillé, facile d'accès pour les nématologues.

The Energy Technology Database (ETDB) is a multinational database that contains energy technology literature from 11 countries, with the U.S. Dept. of Energy as the publisher and operating agent. In 1987 a project was begun under the auspices of the Canadian Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology (CANMET) to provide a Canadian contribution to this database. Technical energy literature published in Canada was acquired, catalogued, indexed, abstracted by Micromedia, and submitted to the operating agent in machine-readable form. This report describes the first three years of the project.

In 1982, a cooperative fisheries rehabilitation research program was initiated on Dauphin Lake, Manitoba to develop and test new biological and hydrological techniques for the rehabilitation of fisheries in the freshwaters of Canada. Emphasis was on the rehabilitation of the walleye, one of the most economically important freshwater fish species in Canada. As part of the program, a study was initiated in 1984 to assess Dauphin Lake fish community structure and monitor changes within that community that may have occurred as a result of natural variation and/or management products. This report presents catch and biological data collected from the Dauphin Lake fish populations from 1984-89.

Centralized and decentralized stochastic routing models in telecommunication networks -- Rev.

by B. Sansó, F. Soumis and M. Gendreau. Montréal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1991. 25 p. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 731) MICROLOG 92-02303 1 fiche

With the advent of non-hierarchical routing in circuit-switched telecommunication networks, on-line routing policies were developed to optimize some measure of gain or performance. While these policies are decentralized, traditional planning models are centralized. This paper presents a decentralized routing model to be used in network planning and compares it theoretically and empirically with a centralized multicommodity flow model previously presented. The two models are solved by the same type of algorithm, a convex simplex implementation, adapted differently according to the model. The paper also discusses comparative results between planning models reproducing the two policies.

Des études antérieures indiquent que le chauffage au bois peut, dans certaines conditions, libérer des fumées dans l'habitation. Ces polluants, reconnus comme substances cancérogènes, risquent de porter préjudice à la santé des occupants s'ils s'y retrouvent en forte concentration ou en concentration modérée pendant une longue période. L'étude de 100 systèmes de chauffage au bois choisis ici et là au Canada avait pour but d'établir l'état des systèmes et, par le biais d'entrevues, la fréquence, la durée et l'intensité des émanations. Ce rapport fournit les résultats de l'étude.

Le changement structurel des économies industrielles suscite présentement beaucoup d'intérêt, notamment l'expansion du secteur des services sur le plan de la production et, surtout, de l'emploi, par rapport aux autres secteurs. Dans ce document, on étudie l'évolution de l'économie canadienne et on tente d'expliquer certains changements structurels survenus durant la période 1967-1986 à l'aide d'un modèle macroéconomique restreint. Ce modèle permet de désagréger l'économie en trois secteurs: les biens, les services commerciaux et les services non commerciaux, et selon certaines variables sectorielles. De plus, on examine le fondement théorique; la structure du modèle et les liens intersectoriels; la structure du modèle, les paramètres et le changement structurel; et, la dynamique structurelle des chocs du côté de l'offre et de la demande propres aux divers secteurs.

The American oyster population of the Dunk River public fishing area is one of the most productive in Prince Edward Island and remains one of the most important sources of legal-size oysters for the spring relay fishery. This report is an assessment of the distribution, abundance and structure of the oyster population of the area based on a quantitative study conducted in July 1987. A standard sampling procedure, based on previous studies conducted from 1969-77, permits an examination of the changes that have occurred in the population since it was last surveyed in 1977. The data reported for 1972 are re-analyzed with additional information and re-presented for comparison. The study was designed to obtain baseline field data required to initiate further studies on the biology and ecology of the Bedeque Bay oyster population.

This paper proposes that the analysis of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) in sediments in urban and industrial regions be used as a pollution index of particular pelagic areas. Kitakyushu City in Japan, a heavy industrial area, was chosen as an example. Quantitative analysis was performed of the PAHs in the sea sediments of pelagic areas in Dokai Bay, which is semi-enclosed, in the Kannon Strait, where the tidal current is violent, and in the Sea of Suo, where there is strong sedimentary rock action. This paper presents the results of the multivariate analyses of the PAH composition in the sediments.

Storm sewers are designed to channel untreated storm water into surface waters. An unusually high dry weather flow of storm sewage along with high fecal coliform counts indicate there may be potentially hazardous sanitary connections in the storm sewer line. This study assessed the use of bacterial indicators to trace illegal sanitary connections to storm sewers. The indicators selected for study were Escherichia coli, fecal coliforms, fecal streptococci, enterococci, Pseudomonas aeruginosa, Clostridium perfringens, and Bifidobacterium sp. The organisms were collected during periods of wet and dry weather from October 1986 to August 1988. The three sampling sites in the Mount Steven Trunk storm sewer line were selected because this area is designated a high priority sewer. Three non-priority sites in the same trunk storm sewer line were sampled for comparison. For wet weather, samples were collected from the non-priority sites. Samples were also obtained from a sanitary sewer in close proximity to the priority storm sewer sampling points. Biochemical testing, serotyping, and/or genotyping were used to further characterize the more than 4,000 fecal streptococcus, Pseudomonas aeruginosa, and Bifidobacterium spp isolates.

Ce document de travail explique l'engagement du gouvernement de l'Ontario à faire enchaîner une charte sociale dans la Constitution. Il commence par une discussion des principales caractéristiques des programmes sociaux que le Canada a mis sur pied au sein de la structure fédérale. Il aborde le rôle primordial que les deux ordres de gouvernement doivent continuer de jouer dans la mise en valeur, le financement et la gestion des programmes sociaux au profit de l'ensemble de la population canadienne. Il propose ensuite quatre éléments fondamentaux qui doivent constituer la charte sociale: les normes enchaînées, les institutions chargées de l'application de la charte, la participation du public et l'engagement du partage à l'échelle nationale. En dernier lieu, le document présente un certain nombre d'options sur la manière de définir et d'enchaîner ces éléments dans la Constitution.

Names are arranged alphabetically under the respective genus-group names, with valid genus-group and family-group names listed in phylogenetic order. Species distributions are presented in tabular form, indicating the presence or absence of the taxa in each province and territory, in Labrador, and in Alaska. Introduced and holarctic species are highlighted. References to pertinent identification keys are indicated under the corresponding supraspecific taxon. A brief introduction is given for every family treated and an index to all supraspecific names is included.

techniques, such as induction coupled plasma

Beginning in August 1989, concerns were expressed by salmon growers operating in Bliss Harbour about particulate fish wastes reaching their cage sites. Possible pollution sources included a fish meal rendering plant which operates from August to September, dumping the bloodwater (blood, scales, and wastes washed off the floor) and stickwater (wastes after cooking from the separators) untreated into the harbour, municipal sewage wastes; wastes from the salmon growing industry; and organic pollution by pulp mill wastes. Field surface and bottom sampling was conducted from a vessel and in one case, Secchi disc depth readings were also determined. Twelve stations were regularly sampled, and additional samples were taken directly from the plant (stickwater) and from near the submarine effluent pipe (bloodwater).
Measurements were taken of surface and bottom temperature, salinity, dissolved oxygen concentration in seawater, amino acids, and IR

The effect of wetlands on drainage water chemistry remains an outstanding issue of the federal Long Range Transport of Airborne Pollutants (LRTAP) program, since a distinctive feature of wetlands is the production of large amounts of organic acids. This confounds modelling of acid precipitation effects in drainage basins containing significant wetland areas. This report summarizes the results of three successive years (1986-88) of field work on wetland chemistry in Kejimikujik National Park in southwestern N.S. to identify major wetland areas within each of the three calibrated drainage basins in the Park (Kejimikujik, Beaverskin, and Pebblelogitch); to determine the extent and area of organic terrain (peatland) in each of the basins; to classify the wetlands and provide a general description for each including their vegetation characteristics; to establish whether there is a seasonal aspect to wetland soil chemistry in the area, and if there is, characterize the chemical changes, and to determine if there are relationships which can be established between the seasonal changes in drainage water chemistry and seasonal changes in wetland soil chemistry.

Atlantic Canada receives significantly higher than background levels of acidifying ions in precipitation. In 1983, the Inland Directorate of Environment Canada began monitoring 39 lakes in southwest Nova Scotia and 33 lakes over all Newfoundland using improved analytical methods. Most of the lakes were selected in 1982 using historic survey data. The sites, located away from human development or local pollution sites, were clustered into groups based on water chemistry parameters related to acidification, with the clustering used to allow comparisons of chemistry trends between similar sites, making interlake comparisons more relevant. This report describes and explains the results of the trend analysis conducted on the Atlantic Provinces lake monitoring network from 1983-89.

Because of a number of studies in Britain which seemed to connect an increased incidence of leukemia in children to the operation of nuclear facilities, a study was undertaken to evaluate the occurrence of leukemia among children living near major nuclear facilities in Ontario. The incidence and mortality of leukemia among children to the age of 14 years and born within a radius of about 25 km from five different types of nuclear facilities were compared with the provincial average. The five nuclear facilities considered in this study were the Pickering Nuclear Power Generating Station, the Bruce Nuclear Power Generating Station and associated facilities, the Uranium Conversion Facility at Port Hope, Uranium Mine and Mill Facilities in Elliot Lake, and the Research and Development Facilities at Chalk River Laboratories and the nearby Nuclear Power Demonstration Facility at Rolphton. Leukemia data were obtained from the Ontario Cancer Registry for the children from the year of start-up of each facility to 1987. The expected number of cases was calculated from the provincial average, matched for age and sex of the study population. The ratio of O/E, at 95 percent confidence level, was used to determine the significance of the occurrence of any excess childhood leukemia around the facilities.

Children's understanding of ambiguity and interpretation

An investigation aimed at determining how children's notions about text and the interpretation of text develop in the pre-school and early school years. The findings are part of a wider research program directed at understanding what is involved in young children's language and literacy development. Based on the assumption that reading is an interpretive activity, the studies are attempts to spell out the changes in children's understanding of what a text means. The authors' working hypothesis is that children's understanding of the relation between a text and its interpretation progresses through 3 stages: text as intentional structure, text as literal meaning, and text as interpretable semantic structure. The current study extends earlier studies of the 'say/mean' distinction, by looking for some indication of the role of written text in children's understanding of the invariance of 'what was said'. 126 English-speaking children were tested: 64 from Senior Kindergarten and 62 from Grade 2. Subjects were randomly assigned to one of four conditions, which varied on two dimensions: the presence or absence of a written message and the repetition or non-repetition of the 'ambiguous' section of the test. The test centred around a series of short illustrated narratives, each containing an area of ambiguity between what is said and what is actually meant.

Presents the results of research undertaken to determine whether visual and spoken ambiguity are facets of the same underlying understanding, and whether the ability to distinguish both develop around the same age: i.e. 4 years old. Previous experiments had suggested that while 4 is the transitional age for understanding visual ambiguity, the ability to correctly judge spoken ambiguity does not develop until the age of 5 or 6. The authors of the present study theorize that since a similar capacity for metarepresentation is required for both conditions, children should come to understand both about the same time. Forty 4-year-olds who attended metropolitan daycares or junior kindergarten were chosen for the experiment, which comprised two spoken and two visual conditions.

Presents the results of an investigation into children's ability to distinguish between what is said and what is meant, and the age at which children begin to develop the capacity to recognize ambiguity in a message. Past experiments have produced no clear evidence to show that young children are capable of differentiating between a speaker's intended meaning and the literal meaning of his/her message. The authors therefore devised a new series of experiments to test this ability. Three experiments were performed, using 55, 51 and 56 children respectively. Participants were drawn from lower- and middle-class homes, and all attended elementary school. In the first two experiments, the children ranged in age from 4 to 6 years; in the third, the 4-year-olds were replaced by 9-year-olds. A number of conditions were set up ('Correct Belief - Ambiguous', 'Correct Belief - Unambiguous', 'False Belief - Ambiguous', 'False Belief - Unambiguous'), and the order in which the subjects received the conditions was counterbalanced across subjects. Questions measured the subjects' ability to distinguish between 'knowing' and 'believing', in a particular set of circumstances.

One Canadian child in six under the age of 16 is poor. This paper examines the impact of poverty on children, with particular reference to how poor children fare in elementary and secondary schools. It provides descriptions of several (primarily Canadian) school-based initiatives designed to help these children. The closing sections briefly consider whether schools can be effective agents of social change and propose some general suggestions for future school-based interventions for low-income children.

Ce document se compose de trois parties: les chercheurs, les instruments d'accès à l'informatique et les sources d'information. Dans la première partie, on retrouve le nom du chercheur, le type de chercheur, son diplôme, ses affiliations principales et secondaires, ses domaines et intérêts de recherche. Enfin, la mention de la date de mise à jour permet d'établir à quel moment un chercheur a pu être contacté pour corriger et valider l'information qui le concerne. Les chercheurs y sont classés par ordre alphabétique. La deuxième partie se compose d'index et d'un plan de classement permettant de répondre à diverses questions sur les chercheurs. Finalement, la troisième partie est une liste de publications universitaires, gouvernementales ou autres sur la recherche et les chercheurs au Québec. Classée par organisations puis par ordre alphabétique, cette liste comprend pour chaque publication une notice bibliographique, une description du contenu, les outils d'accès à l'information et le numéro de téléphone où l'on peut se procurer le document.

This study addresses the stability during storage of environmental samples for trace organic analysis. Although several authoritative manuals provide extensive information regarding preservation and storage of samples for inorganic analysis, no comparable manual exists regarding samples for trace organic analysis. This study assessed the extent of information available on stability during storage of approximately 350 trace organic contaminants in water, waste water, soil, sediment, air, vegetation, and biota. The study collected and compiled data from existing sources on the stability during storage of samples for each of 13 compound classes in each sample matrix; critically evaluated the quality of data available for each compound class and matrix type; and based on these data, recommended maximum storage times for each compound class and matrix type.

This report describes what is currently available in policies, programs, and options for persons with HIV across Canada. It describes what was found in specific housing projects and the housing issues that are facing persons with HIV. It also describes a variety of policy options that set out the roles for the actors involved in providing appropriate housing for persons with HIV: the government, the private market, community-based organizations and individuals and their families. It ends with a list of recommendations that address the most urgent and pressing needs for persons with HIV and the communities where they live now and will continue to live in the future.

L'étude porte sur la 'durée annuelle du chômage' d'une personne, c'est-à-dire sur la période totale de chômage dans l'année. Les principales questions soulevées sont les suivantes : Quelle proportion de la population active est en chômage plus de six mois dans l'année? Quelle proportion du tardoar de la période totale de chômage dans l'année ces personnes supportent-elles? Comment cette répartition varie-t-elle en fonction des caractéristiques démographiques et régionales, ainsi qu'au cours du cycle économique? Et, dans quelle mesure peut-on identifier les chômeurs de longue date?

Chronic fish bioassays at Crestbrook Forest Industries Pulpmill in 1987 and 1988

by L. McDonald. Victoria : BC Environment, 1991. 26 p. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-7726-1438-5
MICROLOG 92-03476 1 fiche

The Crestbrook Forest Industries bleached kraft pulp mill at Skookumchuck normally discharges its secondarily treated effluent to ground via a series of rapid infiltration (RI) basins. The RI basins first went into operation in November 1981 and have since functioned well, although in 1986 seepage began to surface at the foot of the embankments below the basins and has continued to the point where it currently represents 20 percent of the total effluent flow. Three basins are not now being used because of the high rate of leakage and Environmental Protection has requested an examination of the geological stability of the area. This report presents the results of a fall 1987 acute in situ bioassay conducted in the vicinity of the seepage using juvenile rainbow trout, along with static bioassays on the seepage. Also, in a 1988 study, analysis for several chlorinated organic compounds and resin acids, commonly found in BKME, was performed on river water, effluents, river sediments, and the tissues of the test fish. In addition, sub-samples of the fish from each site were taken four times through the 40-day exposure period for histological examination to determine if there had been damage to the gill tissue.

This paper explores the issue of the homogenization of modern societies and its effect on working class consciousness by assessing the extent to which national contexts affect processes of class formation and class consciousness. It considers the issues of national differences by examining the literature concerned with exceptionalism and distinctiveness. It discusses class consciousness and the reaction of consciousness to action and power. It also establishes a relationship between contemporary differences in the social weight of the working class and processes of class formation, outcomes of class conflict, and the distribution of social power. It explains differences that emerge from an analysis of data from a comparative survey of class consciousness that includes Canada, the United States, and Sweden.

Synthesis of the current international scientific perspective on climate change, prepared by the Canadian Climate Program Board, a body constituted to coordinate and make recommendations on the direction and priorities for the Canadian Climate Program. The report briefly summarizes the scientific information on climate change due to greenhouse gas increases; the social and economic impacts; and the national impacts for Canada on land and water resources, coastal and offshore areas, and the regions. Future directions in impact studies are discussed, along with analysis, research and data needs, and the international context.

publication of the Canadian Climate Program.
MICROLOG 92-01000 1 fiche

As part of a study to determine the physical, biological and socioeconomic impacts of water level fluctuations on coastal wetlands, a literature review was conducted, with the emphasis on works detailing the effects of historical lake level changes on Great Lakes coastal wetlands. It was found that such studies were scarce, especially on the Canadian side of the Great Lakes Basin. This bibliography was therefore compiled as a source of information on the relationship between climate, water levels and freshwater wetlands. The bibliography consists of more than 540 citations from 1935-91, divided into the subject areas of wetlands, climate and water levels, wetland functions and values; wetlands of Canada and North America; and climate change, water resources and the Great Lakes. Citations are then subdivided into more specific topics, and are listed alphabetically by author. References include published materials such as journals, workshop results, conference and symposium proceedings, technical manuals, and government agency reports. Unpublished works such as theses and government documents are also included.

Les observations d'épaisseur de glace et de profondeur de neige pour les 135 emplacements dont la liste est dressée dans l'index ont été traitées à l'aide d'un programme informatique développé par la division des services de climatologie des glaces. Ce programme est une version rehaussée du programme utilisé pour la première publication et permet la sélection des années d'observations à inclure dans le calcul des statistiques. Pour chaque site, seules les données pour la période de 1961 à 1990 sont utilisées pour le calcul des moyennes, déviations standards (DS) et nombre d'observations de l'épaisseur de glace et profondeur de neige. Par contre, la totalité de la banque de données est utilisée pour déterminer les valeurs extrêmes de l'épaisseur de glace. Seulement 21 sites des 135 emplacements couvrent la période complète de 1961 à 1990. La table 1 présente une liste de ces sites. On indique aussi le début et la fin de la période utilisée pour chaque site.

Tensile tests in polycrystalline metals, alloys and ceramics are normally performed using dumbbell- or dogbone-shaped specimens, a geometry which helps in generating the maximum stress and strain field in the gauge section while at the same time maintaining the deformation field uniform in this zone. This paper reports on a method for making such a specimen with a uniform gauge section made of any natural ice to be tested in tension. The application of the technique is illustrated by examples of 300 mm diameter core test results on columnar-grained sea ice obtained from a multi-year floe in the High Arctic. The paper also describes methods of carrying out post-test microstructural analysis.

Wooden floor systems in residential houses have occasionally been found to produce excessive vibration under in-service dynamic loadings, such as those due to human footsteps. This project was initiated to investigate the types of detailing which can lead to better vibrational performance through testing a series of floors. The test program was conducted in two stages with two sizes of floors. The reference floor had only the edges containing joist ends supported and no between-joists bridging. It was tested to determine its vibrational characteristics. Construction details of the reference floor were then altered sequentially and the modified systems retested. In total, nine modified systems were built and tested with the same set of joists used in each. A more limited but similar study using a different floor size was then conducted in stage two to ensure that findings can be extrapolated within reasonable limits.

The harbour west of Stelco, north of pier 15, and east of Randle Reef was studied in the most detail because preliminary studies found severely toxic sediment contaminated with coal tar. Assays for other regions of the harbour are included to aid interpretation. On April 11, 1989, 46 sediment cores were collected and on

The Gulf War brought to the surface the serious concern that Iraq might have developed, produced, and stockpiled biological and toxic weapons. This matter is now under investigation by the United Nations. This report uses 'collateral analysis' to identify from the public literature the types of biological research that have been conducted in Iraq and published by what institution. This can identify specific areas of published research activity; institutions and scientists associated with such published research activity; and the absence of published research activity in specific areas of endeavour. While such analysis can give indications of a country's technological base, it does not suggest that the work of the institutes and authors cited is in any way associated with biological warfare programs.

Color constancy from mutual reflection

by J. Ho, M.S. Drew and B.V. Funt. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1989. 17 p. ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05566 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Mutual reflection occurs when light reflected from one surface illuminates a second surface. In this situation, the colour of one or both surfaces can be modified by a colour bleeding effect. This paper examines how sensor values are modified in the mutual reflection region and shows that a good approximation of the surface spectral reflectance function for each surface can be recovered by using the extra information from mutual reflection. Use is made of finite dimensional linear models for ambient illumination and for surface spectral reflectance. Results are presented showing a very small increase in error over the error inherent in the underlying finite dimension models. BC PR PS SC

Color constant, color indexing

by B.V. Funt and G.D. Finlayson. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1991. 17 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05827 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Objects can be recognized on the basis of their colour alone by colour indexing, a technique developed by Swain and Ballard which involves matching colour-space histograms. Colour indexing fails, however, when the incident illumination varies. Although this limitation might be overcome by preprocessing with a colour constancy algorithm, the paper instead proposes histogramming colour ratios. Since the ratios of colour RGB triples from neighbouring locations are relatively insensitive to changes in the incident illumination, this circumvents the need for colour constancy preprocessing. Results of tests with the new colour-constant-colour-indexing algorithm on synthetic and real images show that it works very well. BC PR PS SC

Le vendredi 10 mars 1989, vers 12 h 11, heure normale du Centre, le vol 1363 d'Air Ontario s'est écrasé à quelque 962 mètres de l'extrémité de la piste 29 après avoir décollé de l'aéroport municipal de Dryden. Au total, 21 passagers et trois membres d'équipage, soit le commandant de bord, le copilote et l'une des deux agentes de bord, ont péri dans l'écrasement et l'incendie qui a suivi. Ce document présente le Rapport final de la Commission d'enquête sur l'écrasement de cet avion et comprend trois volumes: I (Parties 1-4), II (Partie 5) et III (Parties 6-9 et les annexes générales). Ce Rapport résulte d'un examen approfondi non seulement de l'écrasement du vol 1363 d'Air Ontario, mais aussi du système aérien qui a permis qu'il se produise. Y sont abordés les nombreux points suivants: les faits entourant l'accident du vol 1363; les services de sauvetage et de lutte contre les incendies; le processus d'enquête sur l'avion et l'analyse; le transporteur aérien (Air Ontario Inc.); Transports Canada; les facteurs humains; les questions légales et autres portées à l'attention de la Commission; l'ensemble des recommandations; et, les annexes générales.

Committee on the Financing of Industrial Innovation : final report

Industrial innovation yields increasing returns, such as employment that is more skills-intensive, better-paid, and usually less vulnerable to fluctuations in the economic cycle. Increasing returns are available for as long as people create new knowledge and have the capital to develop it. This report argues that knowledge is not a finite resource, but capital is. It examines this position with respect to the financing of industrial innovation in Canada and abroad. It recommends financing measures which can be undertaken by both the private and public sectors, to improve the financing of such innovation, with the objective of increasing the global competitiveness of Canadian industry and sustaining the relative prosperity of Canada in the long term.

The purpose of this paper is to examine how the Manitoba Hazardous Waste Management Corporation (MHWMC) has dealt with the issue of finding a location for a proposed hazardous waste treatment facility. The focus is the issue of community involvement in the site selection process within the City of Winnipeg. It shows that the efforts of the MHWMC to find an equitable solution to locate a hazardous waste treatment facility through community involvement is good in theory, but when applied in reality, falls short.

In the design of a solid waste landfill mound, a final cover and a liner (hydraulic barriers) are usually incorporated to meet stringent government environmental requirements.

Limited published data indicate that compacted fly ash with lime or bentonite mixes can be quite impermeable. These mixed materials may, therefore, be used instead of natural clays for the construction of the hydraulic barriers. To investigate the feasibility of using Ontario's fly ash for this potentially large-volume utilization option, a laboratory study was undertaken on the hydraulic properties of specimens prepared by compacting mixtures of fly ash and various additives, such as calcium bentonite; sodium bentonite; lime kiln dust, a waste by-product from a lime manufacturing plant; and other candidates. This report presents the results of the testing.

Systems that offered good potential for integration were re-designed as part of an integrated ship-wide fibre-based local area network. The report presents a comparative analysis of incremental costs applicable to both technologies. Costs common to both technologies were considered off-selling costs and are not part of the analysis. An analysis of market demand and pricing trends of fibre optics is also given.

In the early 1980s, there was a re-occurrence of field problems with the alkali-carbonate reaction in eastern Ontario caused by the failure to properly test recently opened lower benches in a dolomitic limestone quarry supplying concrete coarse aggregates. At the time, it was noted that the expansion of concrete in the field, although not accurately measurable, appeared to be significantly greater than that of laboratory concrete made with the same aggregates and cement. To investigate this further, concrete sidewalk slabs were constructed outdoors in Kingston, Ontario in the summer of 1985. The expansion of the slabs was measured at the same time every year in July under temperature conditions similar to those at the time the zero measurement was taken. At six years, 100 x 200 mm cores were removed from the slabs and subjected to a variety of tests. This report presents the results of the tests.

Comparison of centroid and paracone estimates of tree volume

Comparison of the centroid and paracone methods for deriving the volume of 957 sample trees from four data sets consisting of 114 Australian radiata pine, 140 trees of six species of Australian commercial hardwoods, 538 trees of four species of Appalachian hardwoods, and 165 trees of 13 species of Appalachian hardwoods. The trees were measured for diameter inside bark at short intervals along the bark. Using these measurements, volumes were derived for each short section of each tree using Smalian's formula and then accumulated to give estimates of true bole volume. Linearly interpolated values were used to estimate appropriate heights and diameters for the centroid and paracone methods. Total volumes inside bark were calculated for all trees. Merchantable volumes inside bark were calculated for trees that had at least a 2.4 m bole length to the merchantable top, but stems with fewer than four diameter measurements along the bole and those for which diameters were not measured beyond half height were excluded from the merchantable volume calculations. The results were compared using a modification of Freese's test of accuracy.

Study to compare the efficacy of manual tending using brushsaws fitted with herbicide applicators for the application of glyphosate (Roundup) against spot gun treatments of hexazinone (Velpar L) to release white spruce from woody shrub competition. The 25 ha study area is located in Ware Township, Thunder Bay District, approximately 1 km southwest of Trout Lake. Tending was carried out from October 24-28, 1986 to release the white spruce from poplar, white birch, beaked hazel, mountain maple, willow, raspberry, and grasses. Two 0.5 ha control blocks received no release treatment while two 0.5 ha blocks were treated with brushsaws/Roundup. The remainder of the area was treated with spot gun applications of liquid hexazinone. Crop and vegetation measurements for total height, basal calliper, average annual height increment since release, relative dominance, and physical condition of the planted white spruce were made in the control and treated areas. Tree and shrub competition were described for density, average height, and physical condition. The percent cover of the forest floor by broadleaved and herbaceous vegetation was subsequently assessed for each plot.

This study addresses the effects of the abundance and proximity of competition from non-crop perennials on the performance of planted black spruce and jack pine seedlings. Both container and bare-root stock of each species are included because physiological differences after outplanting have been reported between the stock types. The study formulated a monomial (single-term) index of perennial vegetative competition, using distance-based criteria for the inclusion of competitors. The indices were derived from either vertical hemispherical photographs or field measurements but differed as to the number and proximity of the surrounding competitors included. The optimum index was calculated as the amount of competing canopy on a vertical hemispherical photograph in relation to the seedling leaf area. An alternative index that also performed well was the sum of the relative competing stem volumes based on one dominant competitor in each quadrant surrounding the seedling.

Adult sockeye salmon returning to Barkley Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island spawn mainly in the Great Central, Sproat, and Henderson Lake systems, with the Henderson Lake system being the smallest. Sockeye returning to Henderson Lake have been enumerated and sampled annually since 1980 to determine their population size, and age, sex, and length distributions. This report details the procedures used to determine the size of the sockeye spawning escapement to Henderson Lake and Clemens Creek in 1989, and the effects of tag colour and viewing conditions on visual detection efficiencies and subsequent population estimates which depend on accurate tag recoveries. Separate estimates were generated using visual counts of live salmon made from fixed-wing aircraft, ground-based visual counts of live and dead sockeye, Petersen mark-recapture techniques for which sequential applications and subsequent visual enumerations of colour-coded disc tags were made, and a spawner-abundance curve (calculated from the seasonal series of visual counts of live sockeye) combined with three independent estimates of mean spawner residence time.

Biomass may be used extensively in the next few years as a means to remove and concentrate uranium from process solutions or mine waters containing low concentrations of uranium. Among all the organisms tested (bacteria, yeasts, algae, and fungi) one fungus, Rhizopus arrhizus was found to be the most effective uranium biosorbent. Uranium process solutions have low pH values, often lower than 2.5, but the pH must be between 4 and 5 for maximal uranium biosorption by R. arrhizus. This study was carried out to assess the biosorption of uranium by the fungus Scytalidium acidophilum, which tolerates extreme acidity and high salt concentrations. Both complex synthetic uranium solutions and uranium process mine water were used and a comparison of the uranium biosorption capacity under the same conditions was made between S. acidophilum and R. arrhizus.

Numerical wave prediction models are now used routinely by consulting engineers, government agencies, and universities to produce estimates of site specific wave climates. This study compared the measurements of wave height, period, and direction from a number of one-dimensional models to a two-dimensional wave model (Donelan, 1977) which was adapted to run as a wave climate model over a number of years. The study examined models using steady-state equations which also incorporate empirical relations to make the models quasi-dynamic, adjusting to changing wind speed and direction. Hindcasts are compared to several data sets from the Laurentian Great Lakes and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, most of which have wave direction data. In addition, very long hindcasts were made with four models for one site on the Great Lakes where there were no field data but the outputs of the models could be compared.

Competition between Sitka alder and lodgepole pine in the Montane Spruce zone in the southern interior of British Columbia

by S. Simard. Victoria : Forest Resource Development Agreement, 1990. vi, 26 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (FRDA report ; 150) ISSN 0835-0752 ISBN 0-7726-1239-0 MICROLOG 92-04397 1 fiche

This report presents the results of two studies which examined competitive interactions between lodgepole pine and plant species in Sitka alder-dominated shrub communities in the Montane Spruce zone. The first study examined the mean response of 3-year-old planted seedlings to manipulated densities and proximities of Sitka alder. The abundance of Sitka alder and understorey plants was systematically varied, and the performance of pine seedlings and the changes in environmental resources and conditions were evaluated. The second study retrospectively examined competitive interactions among 6- to 10-year-old naturally regenerated lodgepole pine saplings and Sitka alder using a neighbourhood approach.

Compilation and evaluation of linear mutual recursions

MICROLOG 92-05790 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

A linear mutual recursion is a recursion which consists of a set of rules, each of which has at most one predicate in its body which is mutually recursive with its head predicate. This paper studies the compilation and efficient evaluation of linear mutual recursions, demonstrating that a large class of linear mutual recursions can be compiled to one or a set of linear recursions or pseudo-linear recursions and evaluated efficiently using the linear recursive query processing techniques and/or their variations. The techniques for compilation and evaluation of linear mutual recursions are also studied.

Proposes a television series designed to educate people about the complementary health-care professions: naturopathy, dietetics, oriental medicine (Chinese medicine and acupuncture, reflexology, Shiatsu), massage therapy, holistic medicine, midwifery, and chiropractic. An initial program would introduce the idea of life stressors as they related to preventive and curative approaches to health. The underlying philosophy, certification procedures, techniques, applications, costs, and length of treatment associated with each of these professions are presented in detail. Other therapies are briefly described (e.g., iridology, colonic irrigation, cranial therapy, rolling, osteopathy). A final program would summarize approaches and philosophies as they relate to specific issues. Various themes would recur throughout the series: preventive versus curative health care, physical and mental stressors of daily life; a view to low-budget solutions in health care, and the needs of the elderly. The format would include an informational component, a case study demonstration, and an activity. Instructional methods proposed include television, written material, and a journal or log book.

In 1985, research was begun into the development and validation of a weak rock mass model for the safe support of the surface crown pillars at Les Mines Selbaie, near Joutel, Quebec. In 1988, follow-up research began to investigate the feasibility and economics of complete recovery of the surface crown pillars without removal of the overlying soils. This report summarizes the research work at the mines, evaluates the results, and presents recommendations and guidelines for use at other mine sites. It gives geomechanical data for the overlying soils and surface crown pillars, general extraction methods considered and used by the mine, basic design methods and concepts, numerical modelling studies, ore recoveries and economic benefits, and a description and history of cave-ins.

Compositionality and systematicity in connectionist language learning

by R.F. Hadley. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1992. 23 p. Bibliogr.

MICROLOG 92-05403 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Fodor and Pylyshyn (1988) argue in their paper that connectionist networks, as they are commonly constructed and trained, are incapable of displaying certain crucial characteristics of human thought and language. These include the capacity to employ compositionally structured representations and to exhibit systematicity in thought and language production. Since the appearance of Fodor and Pylyshyn's paper, a number of connectionists have produced what purports to be counter-examples to the Fodor-Pylyshyn thesis. This paper examines several of these purported counter-examples. It is argued that although these networks appear to discover a degree of compositionality, and to display a degree of systematic behaviour, the degrees involved are substantially less than that found in humans, and consequently are less than what Fodor and Pylyshyn require.

A Computer aided design (CAD) system for induction heating process analyses

by M.K.C. Ng. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. 7 p. (Report ; no. 90-349-K)
 MICROLOG 92-00879 1 fiche

Induction heating is a non-contact heating technology in which electrical current is induced in the work piece to create the required heating. With its capability for providing high power density and an easily controllable heating profile, it is widely used in metal heat treatment, brazing and debrazing, soldering, welding, and melting. As part of an initiative for energy conservation, studies to investigate the energy efficiency of some of the industrial heating processes and the possibility of optimizing their energy consumption by use of induction heating are needed. To perform these studies efficiently and economically, a computer aided design (CAD) system was developed to model the electro-heat processes in induction heating. This report summarizes the CAD system and the results obtained from a sample simulation.

Delineates a 3-year plan for the integration of computers into the Peel Board of Education's instructional program. The plan has four main initiatives. Integrating computers into the curriculum, improving computer accessibility through the acquisition of more hardware, providing the support services needed by the expanding inventory and teacher involvement, and developing networked computer systems in Peel. The plan assumes that: the Board should take full advantage of Ministry funding to purchase computers for as many applications as possible, the development of computer literacy skills contributes to fulfilling other curriculum objectives, equal access to computers is a goal, hardware purchases should continue along with programs to train teachers, computer use should become an integrated curriculum methodology, and the existing program support structure should be the vehicle for implementing computer strategies. The plan's 10 recommendations have applications for elementary schools, secondary cross-curriculum, Computer Studies, Special Education and ESL, as well as for Peel's computer support system. Appendices give background to the 1987-1990 Computer Plan for Peel, the status of computer use in Peel schools for 1986, curriculum expectations, strategies for implementation, the process of computer plan development, and a glossary.

Computer Supported Intentional Learning Environments (CSILE) : URIF/IBM contract : final report

by M. Scardamalia and C. Bereiter. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Centre for Applied Cognitive Science, 1990. 41 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ONTERIS: ON05864.
 MICROLOG 92-06910 1 fiche

The Computer Supported Intentional Learning Environments (CSILE) is a networked database composed of student-produced text and graphics that gives students the means of searching and commenting on each other's contributions. CSILE 1.0 went into operation and the kinds of enhancements that best support cooperative knowledge construction were investigated. Students and teachers participated in the project for 5 years. The system was for students from grade 1 through graduate school. It provided models of work across a spectrum of ability. Countless uses were invented: elementary students used the database to produce linked charts and plays, graduate students used it for notes about course readings and to compare different interpretations of texts. Users think of themselves as responsible contributors, which has an upgrading effect, encouraging them to become active readers, writers, and illustrators. CSILE's weaknesses arise from the sheer quantity and diversity of notes that accumulate over a school term. From what was learned, a much more powerful system called CSILE 2.0 is being designed with distinct environments for different knowledge operations. The new system will also import information from electronic media such as CD-ROM and electronic mail, thereby increasing coherence, selectivity, and accessibility without losing the benefits of a large, undifferentiated database. CSILE's use should contribute to the overall development of the community's knowledge, and the systematic pursuit of problems of meaning, explanation, and operation should be integral to its design.

Computing the lower bounded composite hypothesis by belief updating by Y. Xiang. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1992. 10 p. : ill. Bibliogr.

 MICROLOG 92-05402 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper presents a threshold method of computing lower bounded composite hypotheses (LBCHs) by belief updating (computation of posterior marginal distributions (PMDs)) in Bayesian networks. The LBCHs are required when decisions are to be made with reward/penalty type utilities. LBCHs are most likely composite hypotheses (MLCHs) if the lower bound is greater than 0.5. Although the method is practical only for computing LBCIs over a small number of (about 20) variables with no restriction to the size of the domain, it is argued that this can often be justified and can even be desirable. There has been no known algorithm computing MLCHs in clique tree based secondary structures of Bayesian networks. The method presented allows the computation of LBCIs in such structures using existing belief updating algorithms. An example is given to illustrate the method.

Cette étude a pour objet de mesurer la concentration dans l'industrie canadienne des services financiers en 1987 et d'analyser son évolution depuis 1984. Elle constitue une mise à jour d'une étude précédente qui portait sur la période 1967-1984. Les activités de prêts hypothécaires et des assureurs-vie sont considérées. L'étude présente donc l'évolution des niveaux de concentration dans l'industrie des services financiers au Canada durant la période 1984-1987, et jette un éclairage nouveau sur la question car elle utilise une approche 'firme par firme' contrairement à une approche traditionnelle dite de 'groupe institutionnel'.

Les conflits d'intérêts ne sont pas nouveaux; ils ont toujours existé. Ce sont les attitudes et le niveau de tolérance du public qui ont changé. D'une part, les exigences et les attentes du public ne cessent d'augmenter, ce qui peut avoir été autorisés dans le passé n'est plus acceptable. D'autre part, les actions et le comportement des titulaires de postes publics sont davantage scrutés, avant tout par les médias, mais aussi par les autres politiciens, les groupes d'intérêts et d'autres intéressés. Ce document porte principalement sur les conflits d'intérêts des politiciens élus au niveau fédéral.

Cette recherche répertorie l'ensemble des décisions publiées en matière de congédiement, de mise à la retraite ou d'autres formes de cessation d'emploi dans le cadre d'un contrat individuel de travail au Québec, de 1982 à 1991. La jurisprudence est divisée en fonction des huit principaux recours ouverts à l'employé à la suite de la perte de son emploi. Ces recours sont énumérés à la table des matières et décrits plus en détail à la Liste des recours; chacun fait l'objet d'un chapitre précisant ses conditions d'application et la doctrine pertinente. Les trois premiers chapitres ont pour but de réprimer l'usage par l'employeur de pratiques interdites. Les recours dont parlent le quatrième et le cinquième chapitre ont pour objet d'assurer une certaine sécurité d'emploi et prévoient des sanctions pour le congédiement en tant que tel, tandis que ceux faisant l'objet des sixième et septième chapitres permettent de punir le défaut d'accorder un délai de préavis conforme à la loi ou un délai raisonnable, selon l'appréciation des tribunaux. La jurisprudence est classée dans le plan de classification présenté dans la table des matières, et un tableau synoptique donne un aperçu global de la procédure applicable au recours. Chaque résumé est suivi d'un indicateur factuel composé de trois éléments, soit: les noms des parties en première instance; les références de publication de toutes les instances où l'affaire a été portée, séparées par des point-virgules; et, le suivi de l'affaire dans une autre instance, s'il y a lieu. Finalement, on retrouve en annexe la liste des principaux motifs invoqués par l'employeur à titre de cause juste et suffisante, un tableau des indemnités de préavis ainsi que les adresses utiles pour avoir des renseignements concernant les différents recours.

Coniston GS : main dam and spillway piers concrete condition survey

by E.J. McColm. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. i, 15 p. : ill. (Report ; no. 91-29-K)
MICROLOG 92-00900 1 fiche

The condition of the concrete in Coniston Generating Station main dam was evaluated in October 1989 and the concrete on the upstream face of the dam was evaluated as fair to poor. The 1990 investigation, carried out from June 26-July 6, consisted of drilling concrete cores from the downstream face of the north and south gravity sections, the spillway piers and the powerhouse. The boreholes were examined with a borehole camera, and specimens prepared from the cores were tested in the laboratory to determine the compressive strength of the concrete of the piers and to evaluate the potential for further expansion of the concrete in the piers and the main dam. This report summarizes the results of the 1990 investigation, with the exception of the long-term testing of alkali-aggregate reactivity.

Connectionism, rule following, and symbolic manipulation

by R.F. Hadley. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1990. 15 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05736 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

At present, the prevailing Connectionist methodology for representing rules is to implicitly embody rules in neurally-wired networks. Even recent attempts to implement production systems within connectionist networks have assumed that condition-action rules are to be embodied in the structure of individual networks which must be grown or trained over a significant span of time. This paper argues that humans sometimes follow rules which are very rapidly assigned explicit internal representations, and that humans possess general mechanisms capable of interpreting and following such rules. In particular, it is argued that the speed with which humans are able to follow rules of novel structure demonstrates the existence of general-purpose rule following mechanisms. It is further argued that the existence of these mechanisms strongly indicates that explicit rule following is not an isolated phenomenon, but may be a pervasive aspect of cognition.

Aux termes de sa loi constitutive, le Conseil économique doit, dans son Exposé annuel périodiquement évaluer, avec méthode et selon un plan d'ensemble, les perspectives économiques à long et à moyen termes et les comparer aux possibilités d'expansion de l'économie. Dans la présente édition, on examine d'abord certaines des grandes questions de l'heure, pour ensuite décrire les projections relatives au moyen terme. On aborde ensuite 3 grands thèmes, soit la recherche de nouveaux marchés, le rôle de certaines des principales institutions de la société canadienne et la redéfinition des modes de gestion du secteur des richesses naturelles. Un même impératif - l'adaptation aux changements structurels - se dégage dans ces 3 domaines thématiques. L'Exposé se termine par des observations et des suggestions destinées à améliorer la performance de l'économie et le bien-être des Canadiens.

Le 8 mai 1988, le pétrolier polonais Czantoria heurtait le quai d'Ultramar à Lévis entraînant ainsi le déversement de 400 tonnes d'huile légère dans le fleuve Saint-Laurent. Au cours des jours qui ont suivis la nappe d'huile a continué à s'étendre. Peu de temps après, la pétrolière Ultramar a rapidement entrepris le nettoyage des secteurs souillés. Cependant, le Service canadien de la faune a tenu à s'assurer que l'exposition chronique aux résidus d'huile toujours présents après le nettoyage n'aurait pas de conséquences néfastes sur la sauvagine. Pour cela, on a choisi de placer pour quelques temps des canards domestiques dans des marais côtiers de la zone affectée. The worksheets feature a variety of tasks to help students to structure visual data through the organization of masses of stars into geometric shapes. However, the tasks are intended primarily to serve as catalysts for classroom discussion. The teacher's manual contains goals, teacher guidelines, vocabulary, instructional emphases, and discussion points, and provides ideas for transferring each of the tasks found in the worksheets to real-life situations.

The Constitutional division of powers : an economic perspective

by R. Boadway. Ottawa : Economic Council of Canada, 1992. x, 71 p. Bibliogr. French ed. (La Répartition constitutionnelle...) : 92-03317/1. ISBN 0-660-14280-5
MICROLOG 92-03316 1 fiche

This study focuses on efficiency considerations on various aspects of the economic union, particularly the need to ensure an internal common market by minimizing barriers to trade, investment, and mobility and the need for some form of equalization among provinces with substantially different economic structures. Efficiency considerations are seldom clear cut, however, and the study reviews a number of different efficiency arguments, some of which point in the direction of centralized government action, while others point towards decentralization. It also reviews the evolution of the relative importance of federal and provincial activity in the area of taxation and spending over the last 30 years.

Cette publication se veut une introduction générale aux principes et aux méthodes de la construction efficace au plan énergétique. Elle traite surtout de la construction pratiquée dans les petits bâtiments résidentiels de moins de 4 étages et de 600 mètres carrés d'espace habitable. Diverses idées et techniques y sont exposées pour aider ceux qui recherchent de nouveaux moyens de réaliser des économies d'énergie dans les bâtiments de ce genre. La première partie porte sur les principes de la construction efficace au plan énergétique, tandis que la partie II donne des détails sur la réalisation de chacune des grandes composantes de la maison.

Containment leak search during Bruce NGS A 1989 station outage

by T. Jarv. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. 28 p. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-117-K)
MICROLOG 92-02009 1 fiche

At Ontario Hydro's newer nuclear generating stations, a physical containment barrier which encompasses the four reactors, the fuelling machine duct, the pressure relief manifold and the services areas minimizes the potential release of radionuclides. Periodic tests are conducted to demonstrate both the integrity of the containment boundary and the air leakage rate at less than 2 percent per hour of the contained volume at design pressure of 69 kPag. During the May 1989 Bruce Nuclear Generating Station A outage, a positive pressure test was conducted to assess the leak tightness of containment at peak LOCA pressure (82 kPag) and also to test the newly installed button-up dampers on all vapour recovery inlet and outlet ducts. The entire containment volume was pressurized and the leak rate measured at various pressures. Concurrently, two tracer gas leak searches for leakage sites were conducted at two different containment positive pressures (15 kPag and about 75 kPag). This report describes the results of those tests.

When the persistent organochlorine and heavy metal contaminants accumulate to high enough levels in biological organisms, they cause reproductive failure, congenital abnormalities, and adverse physiological changes. Since 1968, the Canadian Wildlife Service has analyzed levels of organochlorines and mercury in eggs and tissues of 24 species of marine birds collected from the Atlantic, Pacific, and Arctic coasts. The service also analyzed a small number of east coast birds for cadmium and lead. This report summarizes the results of this testing and its effects on the seabird populations. It describes the establishment of the testing program and its operation; the contaminants found and their sources in Canada and internationally; the movement of the contaminants; the scientific evidence for contamination by organochlorines, PCBs, dioxins and furans, mercury, cadmium, and lead, and the future of the testing program.

The fermentation of biomass sugars to produce ethanol has already become a large-scale, commercial industry to provide both an alternative motor vehicle fuel (gasohol) and to reduce the rate of gaseous pollution emissions caused by burning gasoline. All existing processes in Canada rely on batch fermentation. Continuous fermentation, however, promises to improve process efficiency by reducing fermentation volumes to produce a given amount of ethanol and by reducing labour requirements. This report describes an intensive study of the recycle, continuous fermentation process to produce ethanol. Both a theoretical modelling study and an experimental steady state study are reported and the design and economic evaluation of a large scale, continuous ethanol process are included.

Victoria : Ministry of Environment ; Anti-Sapstain Chemical Leachate/Stormwater Task Force, 1988. 27 p. ISBN 0-7726-0860-1 MICROLOG 92-01045 1 fiche

In response to concerns raised by the lumber industry in the fall of 1987, the Anti-sapstain Chemical Leachate-Stormwater Task Force was established to review the recommended stormwater discharge levels for such anti-sapstain chemicals as TCMTB, copper-8, and chlorophenates leaching from treated lumber. This report contains the final report of the Task Force, summarizes its work, includes recommendations, and identifies various needs and management options. Separate reports on controlling stormwater discharges of anti-sapstain chemicals from treated wood storage areas; toxicologically-based criteria for the stormwater discharge of anti-sapstain chemicals, and a critique and review, and identification and evaluation of mitigative options are also included.

The Breeding Bird Survey (BBS) has grown from an experimental survey in two U.S. states in 1965 to the most widespread and widely accepted means of monitoring breeding bird numbers in the U.S. and Canada. For most land birds and for many noncolonial water birds and shorebirds, it is the only survey that extends across the continent and for which more than 20 years of comparable data is available. This progress note covers 1991, with 1990 and 1989 treated in less detail, using modified weighting with the same statistical program as in 1988. The note summarizes the methods of the survey and gives results, including coverage, analyses, changes between years, and long-term trends

Presents an overview of research findings in cooperative learning. Cooperative learning is a way of organizing classroom activities amongst small groups which are sexually, racially and intellectually mixed, in order to maximize achievement and positive social relationships. Students have a specific task, an assignment, or a project which may go for many weeks. The group remains together, its task is equally dependent on every member's contribution. The teacher acts as planner, facilitator, observer, evaluator and rewards the group based on group members' individual learning.

Les coopératives, une forme d'entreprise originale et distincte, existent dans presque tous les secteurs de l'économie canadienne. Au Canada, comme ailleurs, les coopératives ont pris naissance dans le milieu agricole, mais le concept a rapidement gagné d'autres secteurs d'activités où le besoin était évident (épargne, crédit, nourriture, assurance-vie, logement, garderie, main-d'oeuvre, etc.). #### A Coordinate descent method for the bilevel O-D matrix adjustment problem by M. Florian and Y. Chen. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1992. 30 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 807)

MICROLOG 92-04611 1 fiche

This paper presents a convergent descent type algorithm for the problem of adjusting an O-D matrix by using observed flows in congested networks. The problem is formulated as a bi-level optimization problem and it is shown that in the context of the general bilevel programming problem it can be reformulated as a smooth single level optimization problem. Under the general framework of the bilevel programming developed in Chen and Florian (1991), some properties of the O-D matrix adjusting problem are derived and a coordinate descent method is developed. The algorithm takes full advantage of the network structure of the second level problem and does not require many objective function evaluations. Computational results for some numerical examples are reported.

Evaluation of currently available technologies for removing and disposing of carbon dioxide from fossil fuel power plants, including their feasibility, stage of development, effect on the environment, and applicability in Canada. The most feasible technologies were then incorporated into a utility computer simulation model (CANSIM) in which it was assumed that the CO<sub>2</sub> is removed by a solvent, compressed, and disposed of either by injection to deep ocean or by precipitation of carbonates from brine aquifers. Costs of the technologies are also included.

Alberta Agriculture, along with the Alberta Egg Marketing Board, initiated a provincial cost study in 1983 to monitor the relationship between the national cost and the provincial cost. This report is the summary of the latest year of that study. It provides an account of the costs and economic conditions encountered in the production of commercial eggs; analyzes the present price efficiency; provides the participating producers with a personal economic analysis for management purposes; and provides data for Alberta Agriculture staff to use in extension education. This report was prepared from farm records of a selected number of Alberta egg producers who voluntarily participated in this project.

This publication analyzes the practical consequences of pricing structures on the overall cost and effectiveness of online legal research. Canada's two major Common Law retrieval systems, QL Systems and CAN/LAW, offer their databases through different pricing concepts. It discusses the implications of this difference and goes on to suggest a number of practical strategies for maximizing research results at the lowest possible cost.

The purpose of this project was to ascertain whether changes in construction technologies, materials, and design permitted under the 1985 ABC where sprinkler systems are installed in selected senior citizen residences result in cost reductions which can offset the cost of the sprinkler systems. It describes the buildings analyzed and the costing analysis that was carried out. It also presents the detailed results of the analysis in terms of the permitted differences in sprinklered and unsprinklered buildings for the three buildings analyzed in the study.

Program PCL is an interactive, screen-oriented, menu-driven, PC-based software package for the analysis of the effect of adding passing or climbing lanes to selected locations along two-lane rural highways. The main analysis functions choose the start and end locations of a climbing lane based on the speed differential of a heavily loaded truck; predicts the effects on level of service and average speed of adding a passing or climbing lane; and performs a cost effectiveness analysis based on reduction of delay and reduction in accidents. This programmer's manual provides a general overview of program logic and extensive documentation of the internal workings of some portions of the PCL program, including the utility module and application details.

This report consists of a summary report on an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of alternative emission control technologies for sulphur dioxide (SO<sub>2</sub>) and nitrogen oxide (NO<sub>x</sub>) emissions. The Phase 1 report sets out a 1985 emission inventory for SO<sub>2</sub> and NO<sub>x</sub> by major point sources, industrial sectors, and area sources. The Phase 2 report identifies the costs and contaminant removal capabilities of alternative emission control technologies. The Phase 3 report outlines alternative cost effective abatement strategies and sets out the user-friendly modelling framework for changing the assumptions and allowing for technological changes.

An understanding of the dynamics of ice floes in ocean waves is of considerable importance because of the development of oil and gas fields in continental shelf regions in areas where ice occurs frequently. The forces exerted by surface currents, surface gravity waves and wind fields at the ocean surface, as determined by interactions between ice, currents, waves and wind, are important in determining ice floe motion and wave conditions. This report presents mathematical models used in predicting drift motions relevant to floating ice due to wave motion and in modelling the coupling between wind, surface currents, and surface waves.

Le document donne, en premier lieu, un aperçu de la politique et des programmes de multiculturalisme. En deuxième lieu, il retrace les mouvements successifs d'immigration qui ont façonné le profil démographique actuel du Canada. En troisième lieu, il aborde les deux principaux domaines de la psychologie socioculturelle intéressant l'étude des sociétés multiculturelles, soit les relations interethniques et interraciales et l'acculturation des immigrants. En quatrième lieu, il présente et évalue les données empiriques. Enfin, il expose certains coûts et avantages sociaux du multiculturalisme, et formule des recommandations concernant l'immigration et le multiculturalisme.

Cover design for a fly ash landfill mound : a case illustration

Currently, Ontario Hydro's five coal-fired generating stations produce about one million tonnes of coal fly ash, of which about 20%-25% is used as a by-product material, with the remainder placed as landfill mounds on station properties. In the late 1990s or early 2000s, these mounds must be covered up and sealed in an environmentally acceptable manner, a very expensive proposition depending on the system used and the construction of the cover layers. In late 1989, a study related to the design and construction of final covers on fly ash landfill mounds was initiated. After a literature search, a search was undertaken to obtain suitable computer codes for cover design. Two computer codes were selected which were used to perform the tasks required for the design optimization of a cover system. This report discusses relevant information about the two computer codes, the use of the codes, and the main design steps.

Cow weight and milk yield in beef production

This study addressed the effects of increased cow weight and milk yield on both biological measurements and economic efficiency. Data were collected on 660 calvings of purebred Hereford, and small and large rotationally crossbred cows at the Elora Beef Cattle Research Centre between 1979 and 1983. Cows were housed in confinement and fed a silage based diet year round according to requirements for maintenance, milk production and growth. Cow weights and milk yields were recorded at six-week intervals after calving. Calves were fed a creep feed consisting of haylage and oats. Castrated male calves were placed in the research station feedlot facility shortly after weaning at approximately six months of age and fed corn silage and high moisture corn. Animals were marketed and carcass measurements taken when A1 finish had been reached. The use of electronic headgates allowed the feed intake of each cow and feedlot animal to be recorded. Creep feed intake was measured on a pen basis and feed intakes are reported as weight on a dry matter basis. In determining costs, diet composition was considered since feed prices depend on energy and protein content.

additional delivery methods, especially for correspondence courses, and that cooperating with TVOntario is regarded with enthusiasm. However, cooperative education would involve a number of implications for both TVO and the associations (i.e., program distribution; improving student-tutor interaction; organizational responsibilities). 3 main options are suggested, each corresponding to a different educational level. The 1st includes bilateral partnerships for specialized introductory and intermediate programs. The 2nd involves partnerships to support highly specialized and advanced subject areas. The 3rd option is an arrangement with colleges and universities that offer generic business courses.

In 1978, a stock assessment program was initiated in the Cambridge Bay area to identify separate fish stocks, to identify the size of the migrating component of each stock and to determine the relative contribution of each stock to the commercial fishery. In 1981, as part of on-going studies conducted in the Cambridge Bay area, DFO began monitoring at Freshwater Creek. During 1981 and 1982, partial creel census data were gathered and in 1983 total creel census data was obtained. In addition, fish weirs were used in 1982 and 1988 to enumerate the migrating Arctic char population in the creek. Au cours des dernières années, la présence au Canada d'individus qui, en tant que Nazis ou collaborateurs, auraient commis des crimes de guerre en Europe il y a 40 ou 45 ans a soulevé plusieurs questions: Combien de ces individus résident actuellement au Canada? Comment se sont-ils retrouvés ici? Doivent-ils faire l'objet d'une enquête et, éventuellement, de poursuites? Dans ce cas, de quelle façon faut-il procéder pour les traduire en justice? Comme il n'existait aucune étude officielle sur cette question, on a constitué la Commission Deschênes en 1985 pour qu'elle enquête sur ce sujet et en fasse rapport dans ce document.

Trow Ltd. Ottawa : Société canadienne d'hypothèques et de logement, 1988. 83 p. MICROLOG 92-07098 1 fiche

Ce projet avait comme objectif global d'élaborer une série de critères d'établissement des caractéristiques d'étanchéité à l'air requises de l'enveloppe extérieure des bâtiments de façon à éviter les méfaits de la condensation dissimulée. Ce rapport final fournit, outre les résultats des séries de consultations Delphi et le programme informatique utilisé, une série de critères d'étanchéité à l'air concernant les bâtiments résidentiels de faible et de grande hauteur fondés sur la limitation de la teneur en eau des matériaux en cause. Des suggestions sont formulées en vue de la simplification et du perfectionnement de la méthode, de la détermination de coefficients appropriés, et de l'application de cette méthode à l'élaboration de modes d'exécution et de principes de conception. ● CA PL SC

This report reviews 398 papers published to date on the kinetics of reactions associated with the formation and destruction of N2O in combustion systems. Particular attention is paid to the reactions that might be significant under conditions prevalent in fluidized bed combustion. Subjects covered include gas phase reactions of N2O with various molecules, atoms, and radicals; gas phase reactions contributing to the formation of N2O; catalytic reactions of NO with NH3, CO, H2, and carbonaceous materials over char, limestone, quartz, CaSO4, metal, and metal oxide surfaces; the thermal DeNOx process; oxidation and dissociation of NH3; and artifact in measurements of N2O. All published rate constants for the reactions are tabulated and presented in Arrhenius plots to provide clear comparisons of the results from various authors. The mechanisms proposed for these reactions are summarized and critically evaluated and the methods used in each investigation are discussed. An assessment of the reliability of the data is given.

This study used radio location data to identify habitat used by mountain caribou during each season, as well as collecting data to assess the relative hardship experienced by caribou in the early- and late-winter. Information on seasonal changes in caribou mobility and food availability also helped in determining critical habitats. The study area encompassed the drainage of the Columbia River between Revelstoke and Mica, B.C., with elevations between 460 m and 3,050 m.

This investigation is the first attempt to apply the critical oxygen index of flammability method to hydraulic fluids to determine their fire-resistance in quantitative terms and to provide a more efficient means of detecting qualitative changes in the product formulations. An ASTM standard (D2863) test procedure was modified slightly, using an asbestos tape soaked in hydraulic oil and held vertically in a glass tube reservoir before igniting it inside a controlled atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen. This report provides the results of the test.

Critique of the Gradient/Geotrans report on potential contaminant loadings to the Niagara River from U.S. hazardous waste sites

Monenco Consultants. Toronto : Environment Ontario, 1991. ix, 84 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-7729-7993-0 MICROLOG 92-07109 1 fiche

In 1988, Gradient Corp. and Geotrans Inc. examined 70 hazardous waste sites identified by the United States Geological Survey within three miles of the U.S. side of the Niagara River. Some sites were assumed to be part of clusters of sites, reducing the number of identified sites to 33. Groundwater loadings to the Niagara River were calculated by multiplying the contaminant concentrations in the groundwater by the estimated groundwater flow rates. Contaminant concentrations for each of the sites were based on either the sum of the contaminants detected in the ground water on the site or a concentration value determined by a formula based solely upon total organic carbon and total organic halogen. Groundwater flow rates were estimated by application of Darcy's Law, water budget calculations, and flow models. In 1988, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment began a study to evaluate the methodology of the Gradient/Geotrans study, to assess it for validity, to identify all assumptions made in the analysis and determine the error margin if any assumption was incorrect; to evaluate the methods involved in reducing the number of sites from 70 to 33; and to present conclusions regarding the validity of the entire method of loadings determination. This report addresses those concerns and reports on the results of the evaluations.

This report examines the first 30 years of a spacing study in an older stand of western larch in southeastern B.C. The project was established in 1958 in a mixed stand of fire origin on a moderate slope on the south side of Perry Creek, near Cranbrook in southeastern B.C. Average western larchsite index of the site is 25 m at 100 years. At the time of spacing, the stand was estimated to be 31 years old. The stand was a mixture, with larch as the principal component, Douglas-fir a major component, and lodgepole pine a minor component. Diameter at breast-height and total height were measured for each crop tree at five year intervals from 1958. Radii of clearance include a control, 2.4 m, 3.6 m, and 4.8 m.

Beavers Dental of Morrisburg, Ontario has manufactured dental burrs with 6 percent Co WC for years. This grade of carbides provides suitable hardness and cutting ability. The company developed a 3-3-3 alloy (3 percent Co, 3 percent Ni, 3 percent Fe and 91 percent WC) which was found to have only average cutting ability. A remedial method, coating with TiC, was tried unsuccessfully. With this information and some claims that cryogenic treatment may improve the wear resistance of tool steels and carbides, but without solid evidence, an exploratory investigation was carried out with further application for carbide tools with the resource industry in mind.

In 1980, a current meter array was deployed in the Avalon Channel as part of an investigation of the circulation off the east coast of Newfoundland. This report presents data on current speed and direction, temperature, salinity and bottom pressure for an array of current meters, thermistor chains and tide gauges. Data includes means, extrema and standard deviations of the basic and low-pass filtered data series. Time series plots, progressive vector diagrams, stick plots, autospectra and tidal analyses are also presented.

Forest sites are diagnostic forest-landscape ecosystem units that resource managers must deal with during the planning and implementing stages of management. This paper briefly summarizes the current status of forest site classification in Ontario, dividing such studies into landscape-level and stand-level. The paper also describes the rationale and approach of forest ecosystem classifications (FEC), the programs available, the application of FEC systems, operational groups and treatment units, use of FEC as a framework for forest management interpretations, organizing ecological information on competitive species, estimating soil-associated constraints on forestry operations, predicting the productivity of white and red pine, and describing the habitat of white-tailed deer. A discussion of future challenges for forest site classification in Ontario is also included. FO ON PR SC

In 1978, an international consortium of scientists from Canada, Denmark, the United Kingdom, Iceland, the United States, and West Germany successfully completed a research deep drilling project in Iceland. These scientists formed the International Crustal Research Drilling Group to organize further deep drilling investigations and to compare the results with those from the Deep Sea and Ocean Drilling Projects. From 1982-85, five holes were drilled at three sites in Cyprus to study the Troodos ophiolite. The drilling was part of an integrated petrological, structural, and geophysical study of the ophiolite, involving both field mapping and diamond drilling. This report is the third of three on the project, discussing holes drilled through the pillow lava succession and giving descriptions of the cores along with other geological, geophysical, and geochemical data.

This study assessed mortality losses and height growth reductions due to black army cutworm (BAC) defoliation and terminal bud damage; assessed the influence of initial seedling height and time of planting in relation to defoliation upon rates of mortality and height growth losses; determined seedling susceptibility of different species to BAC-related defoliation and damage; correlated pheromone trap catches with subsequent larval populations and seedling damage; assessed the association between vegetation defoliation during larval feeding and final level of seedling defoliation; and developed guidelines to assist foresters in minimizing the losses to this regeneration pest. Damage appraisal plots were established with BAC outbreaks and data was collected on at least 15 seedlings within a given cell consisting of four initial height classes, four seedling species, five levels of defoliation, and two planting times in relation to time of defoliation.

The annulus gas system (AGS) at Darlington Nuclear Generating Station uses carbon dioxide gas in the annular space between the pressure tubes and calandria tubes to reduce heat loss to the moderator. Moisture leaking to the annulus gas from pressure tubes, calandria tubes, and end shields are detected by Panametrics aluminum oxide dew point meters. Leak simulation tests were carried out at Pickering unit 2 in 1987 by injecting heavy water vapour into the AGS to determine the response of that particular arrangement of AGS system piping and for dew point meters which were calibrated with light water. These tests were repeated in 1989 for the different piping design of Darlington and for dew point meters calibrated with heavy water. This report gives the results of the tests.

A decline in the commercial catch of Arctic charr from the Diana River stocks led to the closure of the Rankin Inlet fishery in 1985, and designated domestic fishing areas have been closed to commercial fishing since 1983. In 1986 a biological investigation was conducted on the Diana River to determine the status of the stock. A similar investigation was planned on the Diana River in 1990 to determine if the stock had recovered since the closure was invoked, but unusually heavy rainfall raised the discharge and the investigation was moved to nearby Meliadine River, used by Rankin Inlet residents for domestic and sport fishing. A weir, or counting fence, was used to enumerate the upstream migration of Arctic charr. This report presents the data collected from this study. All species of fish passing through the trap were counted and released. Charr were live sampled for fork length and round weight and released, with a small subsample of charr, stratified by length, sacrificed to determine the age-length relationship, and sex and stage of maturity.

by M. Toulgoat and R.M. Turner. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1991 vii, 32 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 1100) MICROLOG 92-02625 1 fiche

This report describes simulation studies of fast projection techniques for adaptive nulling of jammer signals. The techniques are based on a data selection criterion applied directly to the data vectors obtained at the output of an antenna array. The selected data vectors are used in fast projection algorithms to estimate the antenna weighting vector that is orthogonal to the jamming vectors. Four such algorithms are described, ranging from the fastest but least effective to the most computationally demanding but most effective. Relative performance is compared with that of the standard sample matrix inversion (SMI) technique for test cases which evaluate the effects of the number of jammers, the jammer strengths relative to the receiver noise, and the jammer angular positions.

Presents preliminary research into the conditions under which the application of strategies to compensate for missing data would lead to less biased or more efficient estimates of multilevel model parameters. FORTRAN programs needed for the simulations were written and tested. 3 methods of imputation for missing explanatory variable values, mean, regression, and stochastic regression, were selected for comparison in the initial pilot work. Preliminary experiments were conducted.

Presents a ten-year review of the revenue and expenses of universities in Ontario. An overview and notes of caution preface five sections of tables: enrolment and basic income units, summary information for all universities and affiliated and federated colleges, sources of revenue for each university, objects of expense for each university, and financial information for each affiliated and federated college. The authors suggest that university finances should be viewed in the context of Ontario's policy environment which between the 1978-79 and 1987-88 fiscal years has featured strong economic growth and a heavy demand on universities.

Trembling aspen and balsam poplar occur in extensive stands in Alberta, constituting 44% of the volume of provincial forests according to recent inventory figures. Until recently, these species were not economically attractive but with the development of their use for oriented strand board (OSB) and chemi-thermal-mechanical pulp, levels of internal decay, to which both of these processes are sensitive, is now important. A cull survey was conducted in older stands of aspen (40-60 years and 60-80 years) to determine decay trends. Field sampling was carried out from October 12, 1987 to March 31, 1988. This report describes the methodology and the results obtained.

Decentralized observers for large scale systems

Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1989. 18 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05571 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper proposes a new technique for decentralized state estimation in large scale control systems. Given that a large scale dynamical system can be decomposed into a number of interconnected input-output decentralized subsystems, a method for designing totally decentralized local reduced order estimators is proposed. Here the interconnection effect among the subsystems is treated as totally unknown inputs to each subsystem. The method builds upon a novel approach in designing reduced order unknown input observers (UIO) for dynamical systems, and it therefore results in totally decentralized estimators' structure. Necessary and sufficient conditions for designing such estimators are stated. Finally, the design approach is verified by a numerical example.

A manager planning a distribution network faces a multiple-vehicle routing problem, the first step of which is to assign customers to vehicles. One way to do this is to partition a given territory into zones assigned to each vehicle. This paper presents a decision support system that enables the distribution manager to interactively design the zones at the screen using his own judgement as well as suggestions made by the system.

Description of a laboratory study to investigate the cause of the rapid decomposition of hydrazine to ammonia in Pickering Nuclear Generating Station A boiler lay-up solutions during the retubing of reactors U1 and U2. Tests were carried out to simulate boiler lay-up conditions using nitrogen and 1 and 2 percent oxygen with balance nitrogen as cover gases

Tests lasted two to three weeks, and the solutions were agitated to promote or accelerate chemical reactions. Fossil-fuelled boiler deposit of a composition similar to Pickering boiler deposits was used in the tests. The effects of the presence of copper and iron oxides, of substantial areas of carbon steel and Monel 400, of high and low pH, and of the presence of soluble iron, copper, and nickel ions, were evaluated.

Deep Water Lake Cooling is a method of cooling office buildings in and near downtown Toronto through the use of a very large volume of cold water deep in Lake Ontario. The cold water would be pumped through tunnels from the lake into a pumping station on the shore. Buildings in the area bounded by Queen's Quay, Bloor Street, Jarvis Street, and Spadina Avenue would be served by a grid of tunnels and branch lines. The pumping station would distribute the cold water to heat exchangers within the buildings, then the warmer water would be returned to the lake. This overview of 11 research reports commissioned for the conference explains deep lake water cooling, its advantages, its status, the environmental issues, methods of financing and managing it, and the future of the concept.

The generalized travelling salesman problem (GTSP) consists of determining the shortest Hamiltonian circuit entering and leaving each of a number of clusters of vertices once and exactly once. This paper describes an exact algorithm for asymmetrical GTSPs in which clusters are pairwise disjoint and each vertex may appear on the optimal circuit exactly once. A lower bound for the problem is obtained from the assignment relaxation of the problem and this bound is then embedded in a tree search procedure.

Degrees of change : steps towards an Ontario global warming strategy

Ontario Global Warming Coalition. Toronto : Ministry of Energy ; Ministry of the Environment, 1991. 146 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-02216 2 fiche

The Ontario Global Warming Coalition was founded in 1990 after the release of the Ontario government's policy paper setting out Ontario's response to the problem to facilitate further consultation among environmental groups, government, and other stakeholders on the issue. This report presents a survey of the most promising policy measures and technologies to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, estimates of their potential to reduce provincial carbon emissions, and discussion of the primary market and institutional barriers to their achievement, as well as a proposal of reforms needed to overcome such barriers, especially in Ontario's regulation of utilities. An assessment of the implications of the cost effectiveness, institutional changes necessary to successfully implement the measures, and their potential impact on the province's technology base and employment is also presented. Finally, a case study is presented that identifies opportunities for commercializing new natural gas cogeneration technologies in Ontario that could be used to reduce carbon emissions and suggests new policies to help the province capitalize on its global warming strategy by encouraging the growth of new businesses and jobs connected with such technologies.

A demonstration was carried out by Spider Recycling, a waste haulage company, to determine how to sort, process and recycle or reuse waste disposed of by the company, using a new processing system based on ATS (Aufbereitungs Technologie und Systeme) thermal screw press technology. Selected loads of waste (totalling 1,000 tonnes) from construction, sawmill, landscape, and tire industries located around greater Toronto, were delivered to a pilot separation and processing site and separated into piles of similar materials such as wood, drywall, and tires. The separated piles were then drawn on as feedstock for processing through the ATS thermal screw press system. Usable forms of product and raw material were made by processing through this machine. This report describes methods of waste separation, the ATS thermal screw press, and processes for dealing with wood, sawmill residues, yard waste, municipal garbage, tires, drywall waste, plastics, and roofing waste and the materials constructed from the waste.

The driving force created by ocean currents is the primary factor influencing the drifting of icebergs and the quality of iceberg drift prediction is directly dependent on the accuracy of current data. The satellite tracked Tires Ocean Drifters (TODs) are an economical means to provide near real time current measurements over an extended period of time. This paper provides a detailed discussion of the amount and type of human activity, the variability and knowledge of ocean currents, the iceberg population density, and the expected trajectory of TODs relative to where they are needed. Particular attention is given to the development of an ocean currents database. Based on these factors, a desirability index that indicates the need for TOD data in a particular area is developed leading to the formulation of a deployment strategy.

The Design and monitoring of a modified uranium biosorption pilot plant : final report

In the past 10 years, a proprietary process for the selection extraction of ions from dilute complex solutions using immobilized microbial biomass was developed at McMaster University. In 1989, a continuous pilot plant using immobilized Rhizopus arrhizus biomass in an upflow column was operated for 14 months on industrial biologically leached uranium solutions. The pilot plant yielded uranium aluminate peak concentrations corresponding to a 30-fold concentration of the initial uranium present in the Dennison Mines bioleach solutions that contained 300 mg U/l. This project uses a larger pilot plant to develop and design a new modified conceptual flow sheet for the continuous biosorptive recovery of uranium from Elliot Lake biological leachates; sizes and provides a complete operating and sampling protocol for the individual unit operations involved in the new flow sheet; and charges the pilot plant with immobilized microbial biomass and the first uranium biosorption/elution cycle. This report describes the design and operation of this larger pilot plant.

Design of a TEM cell EMP simulator (U)

by P. Sevat. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1991. vii, 110 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 1084) MICROLOG 92-02624 2 fiche

Electromagnetic pulse (EMP) simulators are designed to simulate the EMP generated by a nuclear weapon and, subsequently, are used to harden equipment against the effects of EMP. The Defense Research Establishment currently has a 1m, asymmetric, parallel-plate EMP simulator in use for testing computer size terminals. In addition, a 10m, parallel-plate, EMP simulator is under development for testing larger objects such as helicopters. This report concerns the design of a small, symmetric, coaxial type of EMP simulator intended primarily for R and D purposes, including calibration of sensors, precision measurements, and design and testing of transient suppression devices. A detailed design is given for a 50 and 100 TEM cell, both of which integrate the pulse generator and terminating network inside the cell to form a completely shielded structure.

Design of digital signal processing algorithms for enhancing the measurements of ultra-fast electromagnetic transients (U)

by M. Dion. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1991. vii, 37 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 1095) MICROLOG 92-02509 1 fiche

This report describes the various techniques and algorithms developed to enhance the accuracy of the measurements of very fast transient electromagnetic fields generated during EMP testing. The report highlights fundamentals of digital signal processing and their practical application, describes the response of some sensors to incident fields; develops appropriate algorithms for reconstructing the incident field from the measurements, describes the effect of a low frequency cut-off of some sensors; and presents a method to design a digital filter of arbitrary transfer function, which is then applied to compensate for losses occurring in long cable to fine tune other filters. The Hilbert transform is introduced to relate the magnitude and phase component of a transfer function. Finally, an implementation of the transform is given, allowing the design of digital filters when only the magnitude of the transfer function is known.

Design of experiments and equipment to test the ballooning characteristics of CANDU pressure tubes

by C.F. Forrest, F. Stern and R.G. Hart. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1992. v, 58 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Research report ; INFO-0351-2) MICROLOG 92-07289 1 fiche

A postulated accident scenario for CANDU reactors involves a Loss of Coolant Accident (LOCA) in which the coolant flow through the pressure tubes is reduced causing the temperature to rise rapidly. In some cases, the combination of pressure and temperature may cause ballooning of the pressure tubes. For safety analysts, models have been formulated that described pressure tube ballooning and failure but these models are based on tests performed on new pressure tubes in an inert atmosphere. Phase 2 of this project undertook to design and plan experiments that will test the potential weaknesses of the existing ballooning model using end-of-life pressure tubes in a LOCA environment. This report describes the tests, as well as a proposal for carrying out the experiments, including budget, work plan, and arrangements with subcontractors.

Design of low-cost flowthrough rockfill dams and spillways

University of Ottawa. Dept. of Civil Engineering. Ottawa : Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology, Efficiency and Alternative Energy Technology Branch, 1990. xvi, 317 p. : ill. Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23283-76138 ISBN 0-662-19577-9 MICROLOG 92-06661 4 fiche

Investigation of the hydraulic and stability characteristics of flowthrough rockfill dams for low-cost small hydro projects. The investigations consisted of one dimensional flow studies in a packed column, and of two dimensional flow studies on model dams in three flumes, including a flume study at the low temperature laboratory of the National Research Council. An investigation was made of the choice of non-Darcy flow equation, and on the estimation of the empirical parameters in such an equation. The overall hydraulic behaviour of flowthrough rockfill dams was characterized, including development of stage discharge curves and computation of the phreatic surface. Modifications to methods appearing in the literature are proposed. The stability of the downstream slope of flow through rockfill dams was investigated, including physical measurements of the force needed to prevent failure. A means of modelling non-Darcy pore pressures is presented.

Design of regular intercity driver routes for the LTL motor carrier industry -- Rev.

by T.G. Crainic and J. Roy. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1991. 36 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 689) MICROLOG 92-02305 1 fiche

Design of a less-than-truckload motor carrier determines the services it operates and the frequencies it offers. To satisfy the stable part of the demand for transportation, regular driver routes have to be built. These routes must cover the planned services and abide by the laws, regulations and conventions that regulate the drivers' workload, while guaranteeing the timely delivery of goods at the destination terminal. The objective is to minimize costs and to ensure an efficient fleet utilization. This paper describes the problem, examines its characteristics, and proposes a modelling and algorithmic approach based on set covering ideas. Results of an actual application are also presented.

Design, development and testing of the Arktos passive amphibious barge system : final report by W.R. Mann ; for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination Group, Transport Canada. Ottawa : Canarcic, 1990. vii, 145 p. : ill.

MICROLOG 92-00991 2 fiche

Cargo handling in northern ports is hampered by the combination of hostile terrain, lack of facilities, and/or infrastructure. Recent experience with Watercraft's Arktos amphibious vehicle has proven its ability to perform in Arctic conditions. This project develops the design of an amphibious barge to be used in conjunction with the Arktos vehicle. The barge is designed to carry a 12.5 t payload and be able to traverse a variety of terrains such as ice, water, and ice/water interfaces. Model tests were conducted to determine basic stability, acceptable seakeeping characteristics, and land manoeuvrability.

Designing collection routes through bank branches -- Rev.

by V. Lambert, G. Laporte and F.V. Louveaux. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1991. ii, 22 p. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 703)
MICROLOG 92-02313 1 fiche

Most banks must send out vehicles on a regular basis to their branches to collect cash and negotiables left by depositors. The problem is modeled as a vehicle routing problem with constraints and objective terms specific to the particular banking context, such as penalties for lost interest. This paper addresses the deterministic case and the stochastic case in which travel times are random. These two versions are modeled as integer mathematical programs, and solved by an heuristic procedure. Problems derived from a real situation (a Belgian bank network) are solved under different scenarios.

Deconstructive testing of stressed skin panels

Alberta Research Council. Forestry Dept. Edmonton : Canada-Alberta Forest Resource Development Agreement, 1991. vi, 35 p. : ill. ISBN 0-662-18493-9

A stressed skin panel is an engineered, pre-built component consisting of a frame of dimensional lumber to which top and bottom flanges of plywood or other panel material are structurally glued. Twenty-four full scale stressed skin panels were designed, constructed and tested, six with flanges of Douglas fir plywood, six with flanges of Alberta spruce and twelve with flanges of oriented strandboard. The panels were short-term tested to destruction to verify that established engineering design theories hold for stressed skin panels made with OSB and spruce plywood flange. Half of the panels were short-term tested to destruction after sustained loading for 1,000 days with a uniform distributed load equivalent of 2 kN/sq m (40 lbs/sq ft).

Detailed determination of the metallic phase saturation boundary in the Fe-Ni-Cu-S system under the conditions of operation of an electric smelting furnace treating sulphide concentrates (cost shared)

by C.G. Tan... et al. St. : Falconbridge Ltd., 1991. 20 p. : ill. Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23440-9020-01-SQ
MICROLOG 92-01270 1 fiche

When nickel-copper concentrates are subjected to a roast operation, iron sulphide and a small amount of nickel sulphides are oxidized. To recover the oxidized nickel, a reductive smelting operation is performed. During this procedure, and in the presence of sulphur deficiency, a metallic phase can result. This study identified the metal saturation boundary as a function of temperature and composition. Iron-nickel alloys were equilibrated with iron-nickel-copper-sulphide mattes in either quartz or alumina crucibles at the required temperature for a period of time under an argon atmosphere. Samples of the sulphide phase were taken by suction into a quartz tube which was then quenched. The metal phase was sampled by cooling the crucible that contained the original melt. Microscopic examinations were carried out to insure that the matte sample was free of primary metallics prior to chemical analysis. The primary metal phase in the crucible was analyzed by use of the scanning electron microscope.

Detailed survey of 60-Hz magnetic fields in schools

Public concerns about the possible health effects of 60-Hz magnetic fields, especially in children, have prompted detailed investigations of field sources and their ambient levels, primarily in residential situations. A large body of information on measurements of magnetic fields in houses has been collected but the information on such fields in schools is smaller. This report presents detailed spatial and temporal surveys of two representative schools in the Toronto area, one a smaller, older school with a relatively simpler electrical network, and the other a newer, larger facility with a more complex electrical system. In addition, the larger school is in relatively close proximity to a transmission line corridor. This survey identifies the significant field sources in these schools and compares and contrasts the consequent magnetic field environments.

Immunochemical techniques offer many advantages over chromatographic methods currently used for pesticide trace analysis of substrates such as soil, water, plants, urine, and blood. These advantages include speed of processing samples, high specificity for detecting the pesticide of interest, reduced amount of preoperation and cleanup of the sample prior to analysis, and a dramatic increase in the number of samples that can be analyzed. This report describes immunoassays and discusses their use and the development of herbicide specific antibodies and their use in direct and indirect enzyme linked immunosorbent assays as well as radioimmunoassays. The report also outlines the principles behind monoclonal antibody production and compares immunoassays using polyclonal and monoclonal antibodies. Specific reference is made to the development and use of indirect ELISA and RIA procedures for trace analysis of 2,4-D and picloram.

The ability to detect the presence of heart rot in living trees offers a significant improvement in the ability to manage a stand of timber.

This report gives the results of research to determine if heart rot voids in log sections could be detected using stress wave analysis techniques. Six aspen log sections, representing the species and size of trees of most concern, were investigated for various degrees of degradation. Nondestructive parameters were obtained from the frequency spectra of induced stress waves and subsequently correlated to the degree of degradation in each log section.

La théorie du capital appliquée à l'environnement, qui est considéré comme un stock périssable assorti d'un flux de services de dépollution, est explorée dans un modèle ricardien simple comportant la production de blé et la production de pollution comme produit dérivé inévitable. Le document examine ensuite comment la comptabilité nationale figure implicitement dans les modèles de la théorie du capital ou de la théorie de la croissance et comment on peut dégager des formules pour tenir compte du gaspillage du capital environnemental découlant d'une utilisation 'abusée'.

On a observé que le minimum vital établi dans la plupart des cas dépasse le niveau minimum des prestations de la plupart des programmes d'assistance sociale, en particulier ceux qui s'adressent aux personnes aptes à travailler. Il en arrive à la conclusion que les niveaux des prestations accordées par les programmes de sécurité du revenu ont eu tendance à être fixés en fonction de la structure existante des salaires et des stimulants au travail plutôt que par le minimum vital et à être limités par cet élément.

Suggested theme areas include: what is meant by "thinking skills"; the environment that encourages the development of thinking; special programs in schools; teaching problem solving and decision making; variations of problem-solving techniques; and implications for school culture and organization. Support material would include print materials, videotapes, and lists of participants to encourage personal contact. Discussion with school boards is recommended as an essential first step to warrant the large expenditure involved in the project. Also suggested is the promotion of selected TVOntario programs appropriate to the teaching of problem-solving or decision-making skills, TVO's utilization services, and Ministry of Education software concerned with teaching thinking skills. Background research in 2 areas is reported: the contribution of psychological theories to teaching thinking skills, and classroom programs that teach thinking skills.

Conventional approaches to resource management frequently invest authority in the hands of a technical management agency, with the result that the roles of manager and user are often cast in opposition as guardian and villain respectively. This study addresses cross-cultural contexts where this problem is exacerbated by the difficulties of communication and where management efforts are often frustrated by conflict. The objectives of the study are to investigate such problems by analyzing the relationship between systems of property and systems of management, and to assess the potential for traditional communal property systems to provide a foundation for the cooperative management of local renewable resources held in common.

The C Scale was used to score 16 think-aloud protocols that had been generated by 8 grade 8 students while they composed 2 drafts, which they later revised. In 1 condition, writers were not permitted to edit their texts; in the other, they were allowed to do so. 4 students wrote drafts on an ICON computer and 4 used pencil and paper. 4 students were enriched writers and 4 were average writers. Analyses of scores on subscales (implicit operations, explicit operations, meta-comments) revealed that: enriched students performed best when writing with the computer in the no-edit condition, while average students performed best when writing with paper and pencil in the edit condition; enriched writers appeared to hypothesize, make inferences, and transform their texts more frequently than did average writers, for both, more procedural statements were generated in the paper and pencil condition, with the greatest number when subjects were not editing; enriched students made many more meta-comments (both towards the text and the task) than did average students. In order to assess levels of constructive effort in young children it might be useful to devise specific tasks for them that would elicit greater numbers of procedural statements than they would naturally generate during a writing task. In January 1985, the first wheelchair accessible intercity bus service in North America was inaugurated in St. John's, Newfoundland, using an elevator lift. A second generation lift incorporating significant improvements in passenger and baggage space utilization was developed in 1986. The success of these two models stimulated interest among coach manufacturers, among them Prevost Car Inc., a Quebec-based coach manufacturer which was contracted to develop a third generation lift. This report describes the design development and construction of the lift system and its associated features. CA SA SC TR

The monocoque light and rigid roof panel is composed of OSB waferboard sheets with specially designed jointing between each component welded with polyester resin. Triangular and longitudinal strips are sloped at 45 degrees in a specially designed technique that creates a continuous weld and therefore a very strong panel that resists vibration, flexion, shear, and torsion, and is easy to install. This report describes the benefits of the monocoque panel to the housing industry and the methods involved in constructing it. CA PL SC

Airport construction activities have exposed large areas of pyritic slate bedrock around the Halifax airport. This pyritic rock is susceptible to attack by the atmosphere, rain and snow melt, leading to the generation of acid leachates and other aggressive effluents which may carry other toxic elements. This report presents the results of investigations on the development of capping systems for sealing the pyritic rock outcrops. A polypropylene fibre-reinforced, high-volume fly ash shotcrete system was developed for capping the rock outcrops and an investigation into the efficiency of the shotcrete was then performed. An investigation into geopolymer systems was also conducted, but was limited and did not allow any conclusions to be drawn. CA CM NR SC TR

Canada's well-established mining industry could benefit from a growing demand in China for its mineral products and mining and processing technology, especially given the slow growth in demand amongst Canada's traditional major trading partners within the OECD. This study discusses the process of economic reform in China and analyzes the potential for success of the anticipated restructuring of China's metal mining industry. The study discusses China's current economy generally, then focuses on the metal mining industry; domestic production and foreign trade; the problems in the metal mining industry and the difficulties in small mining activity; the directions which could be taken; and the implications for Canadian trade in metallic minerals. Final report of a project which provided partial assistance in the development, implementation, and field testing of the duty cycle controller (DCC), which conserves locomotive fuel by automatically shutting down locomotive engines when they are not needed. The system may be used in single-unit or multiple-unit operation on both manned and unattended locomotives. Five preproduction prototypes were developed from a bench prototype and were installed on locomotives belonging to the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway. This early field experience allowed the production design to be finalized and implemented. Thirty-five production units were then installed on locomotives of the same line and a four-month test was performed. The test results led to the identification of improvements to the system, as well as the relationship between fuel savings and ambient temperature, and between system utilization and ambient temperature. Based on these relationships, a conservative estimate of annual savings that can be expected per locomotive was produced. These estimates were produced for both Sept-Îles and Montreal. CA EN SC TR

This report details the results of a project for the Linde Division of Union Carbide Canada to develop a technology for the capture and recycling of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). The project is Phase I of a multiphased development program to establish a commercial venture to capture and recycle CFCs. The Linde technology is based on adsorption of CFCs onto a proprietary organophilic, hydrophobic molecular sieve with subsequent recovery of the captured CFCs. The project proves the effectiveness of the Linde approach through laboratory experimentation; compares this technology with alternative capture and recycling technologies; investigates which applications of the technology make sense from a practical and economic point of view; and recommends to government what actions should be taken to ensure that CFCs are controlled. The delivery of veterinary diagnostic capability in the province has some real limitations, therefore a pilot project was conducted to correct them, if possible. The project investigated disease problems, described their severity, identified the factors that precipitated the problem, and determined if this disease investigation responsibility should become part of the veterinary diagnostic laboratory system. Faculty and professional associates at the Western College of Veterinary Medicine, in association with private practitioners and their producer clients, provincial pathologists, and other professionals investigated 34 different disease or sub-optimal production problems, 80 percent of which were funded through ERDA. The local veterinarian or pathologists in the provincial veterinary pathology diagnostic laboratories would identify a producer or veterinary complaint about an on-farm disease problem, the suitability of an investigation would be approved by the standing committee, and personnel appropriate to the disease outbreak would make a farm visit. This report describes the diseases identified and the efficiency of the process. AG MS PR SC

Hazards associated with marine hydrocarbon drilling, including sea ice, iceberg, meteorological, and sea surface information, are usually stored on separate databases or maps. Geographical information systems (GIS) provide for integration, scaling, and manipulation of spatially distributed data. This paper presents strategies required to develop a GIS to examine multivariate spatial relationships between marine phenomena and describes the development of a spatial model for iceberg scouring on Canada's eastern continental shelf, based on the SPANS GIS system. The modelling process synthesizes iceberg information, sea ice coverage data, wave and current regimes, iceberg scour data, surficial geology, and distinct, but complementary, environmental data. Arsenic is a highly toxic element which occurs naturally in concentrations up to 15 percent in many copper, nickel, gold, silver, and iron sulphide based ores, primarily as arsenides. During pyrometallurgical processing, arsenides can be volatilized as oxides or sulphides. The development of effective processes for the removal of arsenic, both from the ores and the flue gases, requires reliable thermodynamic data for various metal arsenides and arsenates as well as a simple arsenic sensor. This project developed a potentiometric solid state electrolyte sensor which could be used to determine the content of arsenic oxides in a gas phase containing oxygen at elevated temperatures (600C-900C). Linseed oil produced from flaxseed is a valuable industrial oil because of the high content of the fatty acid linolenic. If edible-oil forms of flax are to be developed, then the content of linolenic acid in the oil must be greatly reduced. In 1987, 20,000 seeds of the flax variety McGregor were treated with the chemical ethyl methanesulphonate (EMS) to produce mutants with lowered levels of the fatty acid linolenic in their seed. From this treated seed were grown plants, three of which contained mutations affecting the levels of linolenic acid in the seed. The same system also cools the calandria end shield rings, ring thermal shields and ion chamber housings. Sections of exposed piping have developed leaks and an epoxy sealant developed by NNC in the UK has been used to effect in-situ repairs when power is off. Although viscous fingering has been widely studied, the displacement data reported in the literature are not complete enough to develop an empirical model for predicting the performance of unstable floods. This project investigated the behaviour of unstable displacements and developed ways of modelling the recovery performance of such displacements. A review of the available literature on viscous fingering in immiscible displacements was carried out and the scaling criteria reported in the literature for the onset of viscous fingering were examined. More than 30 oil displacement tests were carried out to examine the effects of the L/D ratio in linear systems, the viscosity ratio, and the flood velocity.

Development of improved size sorting technology in otter trawls

St. John's : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Fisheries and Habitat Management, Fisheries Development Division, 1991. 4 p. : ill. (Project summary ; no. 27). MICROLOG 92-00007 1 fiche

Recent quota reductions in some Newfoundland fish stocks, especially that of the northern cod, has led to a need to identify methods of better conserving the viability of the stocks. One way to accomplish this is to ensure that the juveniles of the species have a better chance to survive the commercial fishery and grow to a size that would provide a better rate of return. This report presents the results of an experiment to determine if the SORT-X system, developed in Norway, incorporated into the otter trawl could significantly reduce the capture of immature and/or small codfish. All fish entering the otter trawl were captured to determine the population size composition, and random samples were taken from successful sets (those with no problems encountered) from the various sections of the trawl, including the SORT-X, the codend and codend cover.

Because of the serious consequences of a failure of this type of equipment, appropriate methods of design as well as reliable quality control techniques are required. This project addresses safety techniques using a new method of acoustic emission (AE) testing, developed after the standard AE testing was found to be inapplicable to FRP tankers with balsa wood cores (BWC). A simple way of measuring the AE activity trend was found, and criteria for making acceptance/rejection decisions were proposed. These are based on experiments including 25 tanker tests, 8 of which were conducted up to the burst pressure. A recommended practice is proposed for FRP/BWC road tankers.

Inverted humus mound planting spots can provide favourable growing conditions for interior spruce seedlings although in climates with significant dry periods, seedlings may suffer moisture stress unless their roots are in contact with moist soil beneath the mound. Seedlings with normal root length must be planted partly buried if their roots are to contact the supply of moisture at the base of mounds. An alternative to deep planting is the use of long-rooted seedlings. A planting tool was developed to make deep planting easy and was field tested in August 1988 to plant a trial which is serving to test the effectiveness of long-rooted seedlings in mounds. Two capping depths are being tested. This report provides information on the establishment of the trial and the results by the end of the first growing season. The trial was established near 38 km on the Beaver Forest Road, east of Prince George, B.C.

Monitoring plantation development with permanent sample plots began in 1980. Since that time plantations of most planted species, and all forest licenses, have been sampled although not all species occur on each licence. To date, plantations of white pine and Norway spruce have not been sampled. By 1988, over 1,688 sample plots had been established, of which 88 plots established in 1983 on areas planted in 1978 were remeasured in 1988. Height and diameter of planted trees were measured as well as height, diameter, and density measurements of natural conifer reproduction and competing hardwood vegetation.

Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1990. 14 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-06616 1 fiche

Two of the most important quality components of wheat are protein and kernel hardness, but traditional methods of measuring these are expensive, labour intensive, and slow. This project was conducted to increase the efficiency of wheat breeding programs by utilizing near infrared spectroscopy (NIR) to measure quality components. The project developed and evaluated calibration constants for a NIR suitable for measuring protein content and kernel hardness in wheat; formulated strategies to select for grain yield and protein content in both Hard Red Spring and Amber Durum wheat classes and grain yield, protein content and kernel hardness in the Canadian Prairie spring wheat class; and implemented evaluation and selection strategies that increase the efficiency of developing improved cultivars of Canada Prairie Spring, Hard Red Spring, and Amber Durum wheat classes. This report determined the instrument accuracy and reproducibility after moving it to a constant temperature room.

This report describes techniques for speeding up compositional simulation so that it can be used routinely in large field-scale simulations. The report investigated the reduction of the number of components required to represent the hydrocarbon system; the development of K-value correlations consistent with the equation of state; the investigation of a general flash calculation algorithm that would allow rapid detection of single-phase mixtures; and the proper selection of timestep size that would optimize the number of implicit gridblocks and consequently the run-time.

Potential economic benefits and market opportunities are also considered. SAFECOAT 451 is a PVC resin-based intumescent coating material which swells to many times its applied thickness to form a fire-resistant barrier when exposed to high heat and flame. Marathon 1303 is a water-based halogen-donor coating which emits halogen gas when exposed to flame, thus extinguishing the fire. The study used plywood and oriented strand board as substrates for the coatings.

Outdoor storage of transit buses during the winter months is being looked at as a possible way of reducing capital costs for transit operators. However, there are problems involved, particularly in starting the engine on cold days, and in ensuring a comfortable temperature for passengers during the first minutes of revenue service. Six identical Orion 40-foot buses were used to evaluate four competing diesel-fired coolant heaters in January and February 1991. These units, which consume diesel fuel from the vehicle's fuel tank to heat the engine coolant, were expected to preheat the engine adequately and when needed and to warm the passenger compartment and keep it warm when the bus is on its route. This report provides the results of the tests.

The demand for dimension stone in the world has increased significantly in recent years, and there has been considerable interest in developing this resource in B.C. However, despite a wide variety of natural stone resources, there has only been minor local production and most dimension stone used in the province is imported. This report presents the results of an aerial photograph study carried out in 1990 of selected intrusions in accessible areas of southwestern B.C. The study covered gabbro and granodiorite intrusions as indicated by geological mapping within the area of Knight Inlet, Bute Inlet, Toba Inlet, Jervis Inlet, Howe Sound, Squamish, Pemberton, Duffy Lake road, the north side of the Fraser Valley, and the Hope-Coquihalla area. The study also included quartz diorite intrusions in the Squamish to Duffy Lake road corridor. A total of 30 potential quarry sites were identified, of which approximately 25 were previously unknown. A description of the evaluation techniques and a detailed study report of each potential quarry site are also included in the report.

Directed hypergraphs and applications

by G. Gallo...et al. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1982. ii, 35 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 809)
MICROLOG 92-02309 1 fiche

This paper deals with directed hypergraphs as a tool to model and solve some classes of problems arising in operations research and computer science. Concepts such as connectivity, paths and cuts are defined and an extension of the main duality results to a special class of hypergraphs is presented. Algorithms to perform visits of hypergraphs and to find optimal paths are studied in detail. Some applications arising in propositional logic, An-Or graphs, relational data bases, and transportation analysis are presented.

This paper describes the test results of a procedure to measure the directional response of the NORDCO 3-D hydrophone array, which was designed to simultaneously capture the three components of a sound intensity vector. To calculate the directional response of the array as measured in the reverberant field of a water tank, the x, y and z components of a sound intensity field point produced by a stationary source were measured while rotating the array about its z axis.

by J.A. Bickley. Toronto : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1991. vi, 114 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-00615 2 fiche

The last decade has seen major changes in practice, the introduction and use of new materials, and in methods of concrete construction. In recognition of this and of major changes in the materials supply industry, the Ontario Ministry of Transportation (MTO) has identified a need to develop a long range research program. This report reviews current MTO practice, that of other highway agencies, and up-to-date materials practice and research being undertaken in other countries. Researchers and practitioners within and outside the highway field were consulted and a literature review was conducted. Policy options were then developed and preliminary cost/benefit analyses were done for each. Projects were assigned priorities in importance and in chronological order.

This directory is a collation of information acquired through responses to a questionnaire sent to 8,000 public and private sector research institutions, companies, government agencies, northern communities, and individual researchers in Canada and abroad in fall 1990. The information includes names, addresses, telephone and fax numbers of the researchers; the disciplines and sub-disciplines in which the research is conducted; brief descriptions of the research; the fieldwork location; and key words relating to the research. The majority of the entries pertain to research conducted in the Canadian Arctic, although a small number dealing in research that is applicable to Canada's north (e.g., work conducted in laboratories) was included. The directory is categorized by research by discipline and includes indices by researcher name, fieldwork location, and key word.

Dans cette étude, on présente de nouvelles estimations de la mesure dans laquelle les différences de structure économique peuvent expliquer les disparités interprovinciales entre les taux de chômage dans trois années de recensement : 1971, 1981 et 1986. Le document se divise en six sections : l'introduction ; la deuxième section définit ce que signifie la structure économique et décrit comment d'autres auteurs ont essayé d'en mesurer l'importance ; la troisième présente le modèle de probabilité qui sous-tend les résultats empiriques ; la quatrième présente des estimations de l'influence de la structure économique sur le chômage régional ; la cinquième section traite de ces résultats et de leur interprétation ; enfin, la dernière section résume les résultats.

Disposal of oilfield wastes by land treatment in Alberta : summary report on feasibility, environmental risk assessments and future land uses : a report

by R.M. Danielson...et al. ; prepared for the Canadian Petroleum Association and Environment Canada. Calgary, Alta. : The Association, 1990. xv, 104 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-02765 2 fiche (Available on fiche only)

A program was conducted from 1982-89 to determine the feasibility of using land treatment and biodegradation to dispose of select oil field production facility wastes in Alberta. Demonstration plots were established at Lloydminster, Grande Prairie, Drayton Valley, and Brooks and oily wastes were applied once per year for 2-4 years. At Lloydminster heavy oil wastes such as tank bottoms and slop oil were applied and at the other three sites untreatable residuals from reclaiming plants were used for land treatment. Four levels of sludges were applied at each site but amounts added varied among sites and between years depending upon materials available and the desired adjustments of oil levels in the soil. At each site two levels of fertilization and two frequencies of cultivation were also included as treatments. All plots were limed to above pH 7 to reduce the leaching of heavy metals. Soil oil (hydrocarbon) contents, soil inorganic chemistry and groundwater and surface water quality were monitored periodically at all sites. After oily waste applications had ceased, all sites were planted to field crops and plant yields measured. Detailed assessments of crop production, groundwater quality, crop quality and reclamation procedures were conducted at the Lloydminster site.

Disposal of oilfield wastes by land treatment : effects on the environment and implications for future land use, 1986 research project

by R.M. Danielson...et al. Calgary, Alta. : Canadian Petroleum Association ; Ottawa : Environment Canada, 1987. xii, 92 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-02790 2 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Land treatment sites at Lloydminster and Drayton Valley that were established in 1982 were assessed in 1986 for residual waste oil in the soil, soil productivity, inorganic soil chemical factors and the potential for plant uptake of undesirable organic compounds and heavy metals. Sites at Grande Prairie and Brooks were studied less intensively. Sites were planted in June 1986 with barley at Lloydminster, hay at Drayton Valley and Grande Prairie, and dryland pasture species at Brooks. Plant growth in all treatments at all sites were assessed visually in the fall and quantitative assessments of selected treatments were done at Lloydminster and Drayton Valley.

Dissolved oxygen continues to be the single most frequently used indicator of water quality in rivers and lakes. A technical workshop was held to focus on the use and application of dissolved oxygen water quality in relation to ambient objectives and guidelines, monitoring of Alberta river and lake systems, analytical measurement, regulation and modelling of conventional biochemical oxygen demand point-source loadings, fisheries protection, physiological responses, and research needs based on data gaps. This publication is a consolidation of the papers and notes presented at the workshop.

Distributed database concurrency control by cautious schedulers

by T. Ibaraki...et al. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1989. 27 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05564 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper presents three concurrency control algorithms for distributed database systems based on cautious scheduling. The first algorithm is the most general and is meant for replicating databases, while the remaining two are for non-replicated databases. Each algorithm gives a higher priority to local transactions which need to access only local copies. They will be especially suitable for the case where there is a great deal of conflict among transactions and most of transactions are local. After some preparations, the three algorithms are presented and their correctness is proved.

Distribution and abundance of muskoxen between Bathurst Inlet and Contwoyto Lake, NWT, 1986

by A. Gunn. Yellowknife : Dept. of Renewable Resources, 1990. ix, 28 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (File report ; no. 100) MICROLOG 92-06169 1 fiche

Reports were received in the 1980s of increased numbers of muskoxen in the area of Contwoyto Lake northeast to Bathurst Inlet but there was no systematic data available to estimate population size. The Kugluktuk Hunters' & Trappers' Association wanted a survey to discover whether or not the increase in muskox numbers was sufficient to establish a quota for the area. The Kingoak Hunters' & Trappers' Association was also interested in information on the muskox increase in their area and the potential for a quota change to support commercial use. This survey was conducted to estimate the numbers of muskoxen northeast of Contwoyto Lake and west of Bathurst Inlet and to describe the distribution of muskoxen northeast of Contwoyto Lake. This report describes the results of the systematic strip transect survey of the study area conducted in August-September 1986.
